Med Students Announce Golden Apple Recipients

Dr. Donald Hackel, professor of pathology, Dr. Shirley Osterhout, clinical director of the Poison Control Center and associate in pediatrics, and Dr. Andrew Wechsler, resident in surgery, were the recipients of Golden Apple awards for excellence in teaching presented by students of the School of Medicine at Duke's annual Student Faculty Show at the Stallion Club May 2.

At the 10th annual presentation Drs. Hackel, Osterhout and Wechsler received their awards in basic sciences, clinical science and house staff teaching, respectively.

The winners, selected by a vote of all medical students at Duke, received individual awards and will have their names engraved on a permanent plaque located in the medical student lounge.

Runners-up in the basic sciences were Dr. Robert Hill, biochemistry; Dr. Steven Vogel, pathology; Dr. Athos Ottolenghi, pharmacology; and Dr. William Hylander, anatomy.

Runners-up in clinical science were Dr. Roy Parker, obstetrics and gynecology; Dr. Bruce Dixon, medicine; and Dr. Jess Peters, medicine.

In addition, Drs. James Alexander in surgery, Lucien Rice in medicine and Charles Scott, also in medicine, received votes for best house staff officer.

For the enjoyment of medical center faculty, staff, employes and students, a farcical play entitled "Code 5" was presented at the Davison Society sponsored show.

Presentation of the faculty awards was made by Fred Sanfilippo, a third year medical student and president of the Davison Society. Michele Marlow, second year medical student and secretary of the Davison Society, handled the balloting.
