INSURANCE TIPS

by Vestal Lanthan, General Manager National Association of Independent Insurers

Why Rate Increases?

You hear a good bit these days about rising automobile insurance rates. Some people can't understand why rate increases are necessary. The fact is that most companies writing auto insurance are losing money and have been for some time. Take the first six months of this year, for example. Some 440 companies which write about half the automobile business in the country lost a combined total of $143 million! It doesn't take a financial wizard to see that you can't do business on that basis.

Why are the companies losing money? Well, the cause is a combination of several things, but generally you can attribute it to these two main items:

First, as a nation we have more drivers, we're driving more miles, we're having more accidents, and those accidents are more severe.

Second, the cost of doing business has sky-rocketed 200 percent since 1940. Verdicts in liability suits have gone up; today it costs twice as much to settle bodily injury claims as in 1940. Consider New York. There the cost-of-living index went up only 91 percent between 1940 and 1955, but the average jury verdict for the plaintiff in the New York Supreme Court zoomed 289 percent.
