POE TO HIS SWEETHEART.

Here are some exquisite lines Poe wrote to his sweetheart, Sarah Helen Whitman. He narrates with wonderful skill the first meeting with the woman who was worthy of his love.

TO HELEN:

I saw thee once—only once—years ago;
I must not say how many—but not many.
It was a July midnight; and from out
A full-orbed moon, that, like thine own soul, soaring,
Sought a precipitate pathway up through Heaven,
There fell a silvery silken veil of light,
With quietude and stillness and slumber
Upon the upturn'd faces of a thousand
Roses that grew in an enchanted garden,
Where no wind dared to stir, unless on tiptoe—
Fell on the upturn'd faces of these roses
That gave out, in return of the love—light,
Their odorous souls in an ecstatic death—
Fell on the upturn'd faces of these roses
That smiled and died in this parterre, enchanted
By thee and by the poetry of thy presence.

Clad all in white upon a violet bank
I saw thee half reclining; while the moon
Fell on the upturn'd faces of the roses,
And on thine own, upturn'd—alas, in sorrow!

Was it not fate that on this July midnight,
Was it not fate (whose name is also sorrow,)
That bade me pause before the garden gate,
To breath the incense of those slumbering roses?
No footstep stirred: the hated world all slept,
Save only thee and me. (Oh, Hero—
Oh, God!
How my heart beats in coupling those two words!)
Save only thee and me. I paused—I looked,
And in an instant all things disappeared.
(Ah, bear in mind this garden was enchanted!)
The pearly mister of the moon went out,
The mossy banks and the meandering paths,
The happy flowers and the reposing trees
Were seen no more: the very roses' odors
Died in the arms of the adoring air.
All—all expired save thee—save less than thou:
Save only the divine light in thine eyes—
Save but the soul in thine uplifted eyes.
I saw but them—they were the world to me.
I saw but them—saw only them for hours,
Saw only them until the moon went down.
What wild heart histories seemed to be written
Upon those crystalline, celestial spheres!
How dark a woe! yet how sublime a hope!
How silently serene a sea of pride!
How daring an ambition! yet how deep—
How fathomless a capacity for love!

But now, at length, dear Dian sank from sight,
Into a western couch of thunder cloud;
And thou, a ghost, amid the entombing trees
Didst glide away. Only thine eyes remained.
They would not go—they never yet have gone.
Lighting my lonely pathway home that night,
They have not left me (as my hopes have) since,
They follow me—they lead me through the years.
They are my ministers—yet I their slave.
Their office is to illumine and enkindle—
My duty to be saved by their bright light
And purified in their electric fire,
And sanctified in their celestial zeal.
They fill my soul with Beauty (which is Hope)
And far up in Heaven—the stars I knelt to
In the sad, silent watches of my night;
While even in the dim regard of dawn
I see the dim and trembling star of love
Venus, unextinguished by the sun!

ADVICE TO STUDENTS.—Set up to the table when you read; vary charts abolish memory. Do not go on reading the same book for too long at one sitting. If you are really weary of one subject, change it for another. Read steadily three hours a day for five days in the week. Check the accuracy of your work as soon as you have finished it. Put your tackle out for sun as soon as you have learnt them. Never read after midnight. Do not go to bed straight from your books. Never let your reading interfere with exercise or digestion; and lastly, if you can, keep a clear head, a good appetite, and a merrital heart.
