MRS. LYON'S ACHES AND PAINS

Have All Gone Since Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Terre Hill, Pa.—"Kindly permit me to give you my testimonial in favor of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. When I first began taking it I was suffering from female troubles for some time and had almost all kinds of aches—pains in lower part of back and in sides, and pressing down pains. I could not sleep and had no appetite. Since I have taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound the aches and pains are all gone and I feel like a new woman. I cannot praise your medicine too highly."—Mrs. AUGUSTUS LYON, Terre Hill, Pa.

It is true that nature and a woman's work has produced the grandest remedy for woman's ills that the world has ever known. From the roots and herbs of the field, Lydia E. Pinkham, forty years ago, gave to womankind a remedy for their peculiar ills which has proved more efficacious than any other combination of drugs ever compounded, and today Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is recognized from coast to coast as the standard remedy for woman's ills.

In the Pinkham Laboratory at Lynn, Mass., are files containing hundreds of thousands of letters from women seeking health—many of them openly state over their own signatures that they have regained their health by taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound; and in some cases that it has saved them from surgical operations.

His Brand of Religion.

"Brother Philander," said I to our head deacon the other day, "I have been watching Brother Sly for a while and I am free to confess that I can't quite understand his brand of religion. He seems different some days than others." "Yes," replied old Philander with one of his knowing smiles, "I know what you mean. I will tell you about Sly and his religion. You see, on Sunday he doesn't allow his business to interfere with his questions. On week days he doesn't allow his conscience or his religion to interfere in his dealings with his neighbors. I might put it a little shorter. The Lord is safe all the time. The backsliders are safe only on Sunday." Philander's knowledge of church history is so fine that it leaves doubt as to his sincerity, but we regularly re-elect him deacon as treasurer and lose sleep.—Kansas City Star.

Tough on the Bears.

Some time ago Walter Baker, known as one of Hanford's most prominent boys, wrote a letter to the New York Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. It was responsible, he said, for the government men in charge of the Yellowstone park treating the wild animals. Their cruelty was absolutely barbaric. Not to cite one instance, he said, those sensitive dill not give the poor bears anything to eat during the entire winter, when the whole park is bankrolled with snow.

The society immediately started an investigation, beginning at the office of the secretary of the interior. Such cruelty must be stopped. It proved its investigation could some results and realist told them that bears hibernate all winter.

"I heard a woman flattering you yesterday, dear."

WHO IS WHO NOW

MAJ. GEN. JAMES FRANKLIN BELL

"There never would be a pick or shovel in my regiment, if I had my way," declares Major General Bell, and from this speech one may read the character of the man. A soldier's weapons should be rifles, not intrenching tools. The minute an army stands still and begins to dig intrenchments the enemy takes courage and begins to attack. The only way to fight them is to keep them on the run.

General Bell was recently assigned to the command of the Second division at Texas City, Tex.

James Franklin Bell was born in Shelbyville, Ky., January 9, 1856. He graduated in 1878 from West Point, but didn't reach the rank of first lieutenant until 1886. In 1885 he married Miss Sarah Dalton of Rock Island, Ill., who had attended finishing school in Chicago.

Bell served on the plains with the "Fighting Seventh" cavalry during the Indian wars of 1878 to 1886, and took part in the battle of Wounded Knee, the last great fight of the red men. He became a captain in the regular army in March, 1895, and seven years later received the position of chief of the staff of the army. On January 9, 1907, he was appointed a major general. He rose with exceptional rapidity, being jumped over the heads of 1,036 officers at the time he was appointed brigadier general.

Bell is a big genial, whole-souled man. Asked if it were true he had killed a lot of men with his sword, he replied: "That is a fantastic lie. All that I did was to hit a poor devil in the arm. I'm tired of being described as a butcher." Major General Bell's recreation is that of a soldier.

"What do you do for recreation?" he was asked.

"I sleep," was the laconic answer.

WIFE OF FRENCH MILITARY ATTACHE

Though some of the largest embassies are presided over by American heiresses who are wives of foreign ministers and ambassadors, the greatest number of women in the diplomatic corps are foreigners. One of these who does not as yet speak the English tongue and who has been in America only a short time is the Countess de Fortier de Sauvigny, wife of the military attache of the French embassy at Washington.

Count and Countess de Fortier came to America last November, bringing with them their little son Armand, a lad not five years old, and his indispensable English nurse, who, when the countess is simply compelled to converse with some person who does not speak French, acts as interpreter. It is not often, however, that Countess de Fortier needs the services of an interpreter. Are her lips she keeps house in Washington without speaking the English tongue and she raises her hands in horror, as she says in French:

"Ah, no! I do not keep house. Why should I do what is so stupid to me? I let others do the housekeeping."

What, then, does the countess like? Is she interested in the question of woman suffrage the interviewer asks. Here the expressive hands of the countess are again raised in a gesture that bespeaks protest. The vote for women? It does not interest her. Indeed, she is convinced of one fact with regard to it. This is that it would here her to extinction.

One thing, however, the Countess de Fortier does care very much. That is a spirited horse. Riding, she explains, is her favorite recreation.

MRS. POINDEXTER'S BREADTH OF VISION

Mrs. Poindexter, wife of Senator Poindexter of Spokane, Wash., is one of the women in the congressional set at Washington who her husband intends to take again for a president of the United States. In politics, she agrees with her husband.

All Mrs. Poindexter's friends will tell you that her most commendable qualities are an abiding sense of humor and that especial brand of moral courage known as "backbone." She watches life at the center with a twinkle of the eye, and is not too far afraid to give you her impression of it. Her viewpoint and her frankness in stating it are typical of the unconventionality and the freshness of vision of the western woman.

Perhaps the constant reading of the newspapers of the country contributes to this breadth of vision. Senator Poindexter's wife is an insatiable reader, not only of the news papers published in Washington and in the native state of Washington, but throughout the entire nation. She practically keeps pace with the pulse of public sentiment as does any man in national politics. She likes political debate, and is always an interested listener in the senate gallery when a big issue is under discussion on the floor. All of which sounds like the most advanced type of new woman.

MISS SUMNER, STATISTICAL EXPERT

"Women must and will become the conscience of our national life," says Miss Helen Sumner, statistical expert for the children's bureau, in bulletin of agents for the United States commission of industrial relations at Washington, and a woman who is internationally known as an authority on labor conditions as they affect women and children.

"Thrift, as a national ideal," continues Miss Sumner, "will need to have its insertion in the home. It will have to be taught at the mother's knee before it can become a principle of American living. The American woman has never learned it. The European woman knows and practices it instinctively, for it has become inherent in her after generations of thrifty people that have gone before her. In this country, as we perfectly realize for our nation of tremendous resources and at first of sparse population, our people have lived with extravagance. Now it is different. We are coming to realize that conservation is not only an expedient but a necessary thing.

"This conservation applies not only to the physical and material aspects of life, but only to forests and rivers. It applies in ever increasing degree to women and children, to labor of the young. We are alive and sensitive as never before to conserving childlife and to providing opportunity for the children conserved. We are coming to believe in conserving the health and strength of our mothers, and our potential mother workers. Hence our investigations, our industrial commissions, our children's bureau and welfare work of various sorts. We are beginning to economize with human life and with human resources."

Miss Sumner, who holds an A. B. degree from Wellesley and the degree of Ph. D. from the University of Wisconsin, became interested in a study of labor conditions while still in college.

Valuable Dog.

A commuter, who had evidently been imbibing rather freely, boarded the smoker of a Reading Germantown branch train last Saturday evening, according to the Philadelphia Inquirer. Attached to a long chain he had a collie dog. As he had no ticket he handed the conductor a dollar note and was returned a handful of small change. Studying the coins a moment, he couldn't figure out why he had not received more, so calling the man with the blue suit and brass buttons, he asked for an explanation. The conductor told him that ten cents was the price of the excess ticket, ten cents for his fare and 15 cents for carrying the dog. "Humph," he said, "you only charge me ten cents and charge 15 for the dog, he can find his way home, um, but I can't."

Literally True.

Good Cause for Alarm

Deaths from kidney disease have increased 70% in twenty years. People overdo nowadays, the strain was that the constant filtering of poisoned blood weakens the kidneys.

RINGWORM ITCHED TERRIBLY

"545 Aisquith St., Baltimore, Md.—"My children were afflicted with what they called ringworm of the scalp contracted from a house that they were playing with. The ringworm formed on their scalps about the size of a silver dollar and their hair fell out, leaving a round scale or crust on their scalps. Their hair fell out in round spots. There was terrible itching and they scratched till the blood came. They were very fretful and could not sleep at night, and they were very cross.

"They were treated for several months with no improvement whatsoever. I was told they would never have any hair and would always be bald. Then I began using Cuticura Soap in connection with Cuticura ointment and the first week I could see the wonderful remedies were doing all they were claimed to do and in six weeks' time they were entirely cured. They all have a beautiful growth of hair." (Signed) Mrs. Hadie Pollock, Jan. 1, 1913.

ENGINEERING FEAT IN PERU

Peruvian Indians Build Curious Suspension Bridge Across Mountains; Also Spans a River.

London.—The curious suspension bridge shown in the accompanying engraving was built by the native Indians of Peru, says the Scientific American. It may be found across the mountains from Lima, in the Huancayo valley, near Jauja, spanning the Huari river. Being a mountain stream, subject to sudden torrential floods, substantial towers have been built at each side, which provide secure anchorage for the cables and raise the floor of the bridge well above high water. The floor is hung from the cables by means of diagonal, as well as vertical lines, so as to prevent the bridge from swaying lengthwise. Side sway is prevented by guy lines running from the center of the bridge to each side of the towers. The water under the bridge is on its way to the Atlantic ocean, via the Amazon river. A journey of over 2,000 miles lies before it.

CHILD SAVES BABY SISTER

Asks Why There Are Times When You Can't Make Your Legs Go Fast Enough.

Eugene, Ore.—While neighbors shut their eyes, expecting to see three-year-old Dorothy Wooley ground to death beneath a Southern Pacific passenger train before her home, Gladys Wooley, her seven-year-old sister, sped 150 feet and, paying no heed to the approaching cars, lifted the little one from the track. The side of the locomotive struck Gladys as she fled to one side. Her dress was torn, but she was uninjured. Spectators do not understand how the little figure which flew past them reached the train in time.

"Mother, why is it that when you see some one on the track you can't make your legs go fast?" asked the little seven-year-old girl after the accident, not thinking of herself. "I saw the engine way down the track, and before I could get to Dorothy it was almost there."

The shriek of the whistle which started the race between the sister and the locomotive was the same which brought the children's mother and a dozen neighbors to their doors, yet only the child moved.

The girl's father, J. C. Wooley, credits Engineer Mason with throwing the emergency brakes and doing all possible to stop his train.

Little Dorothy was crossing the tracks with her red wagon when the sound of the whistle startled her. It caused her to sit down in the center of the track, dazed.

The red wagon was splintered.

New Army Regulations Gives Military Full Rein for Maintaining Their Prestige.

Berlin.—The semi-official Norddeutsche Allgemeine Zeitung states: The newly prepared instructions regarding the use of weapons by the military and their cooperation in the suppression of internal disturbances will shortly be communicated to the troops. These instructions, drawn up by the Prussian ministry of war, have received the assent of the federal states concerned and of the Statthalter of Alsace-Lorraine.

According to the new instructions the military are given a sufficiently free hand for the carrying out of their tasks and the maintenance of their prestige. On the other hand, the possibility of a conflict between the civil and military authorities on the occasion of intervention by the latter is obviated.

The first section of the new order deals with the use of weapons on the individual initiative of military persons. This section contains fresh provisions pronouncing the right and obligation of military persons to use their weapons insofar as may be necessary for the removal of any obstacle placed in the way of their official activity or in order to ward off any attacks on military persons or military property.

The second section deals with the employment of the military for the suppression of internal disorders and the execution of the law. The third section regulates the independent intervention of the military in the case of war on martial law and in cases of state mercenary.

A mule took fright at the wheezing, raspy sneeze and dashed into the crowd lining the sidewalks, beating down a dozen persons, running over two youths, demolishing a baby carriage and running over the foot of a woman with a baby in her arms.
