Applications For Mattresses Must Be In By April 30

Farm families have until April 30 to make applications for material with which to make cotton mattresses and comforters, says Miss Ruth Current, State home demonstration agent of N. C. State College. There is no assurance that the mattress and comforter program will be extended.

To date 169,222 North Carolina farm families have filed applications for mattresses, and 23,468 have applied for cotton and percale with which to make comforters. Of these, 134,149 applications for mattresses, and 10,780 applications for comforters have been certified and approved.

A total of 95,359 mattresses and 613 comforters have been made by farm people in centers operated under the supervision of county farm and home agents of the State College Extension Service. They have been given cotton, ticking and percale by the Surplus Marketing Administration, and AAA committees have assisted in the certification of eligible low income families.

"The mattress and comforter program is now operating in 1,472 communities in North Carolina," Miss Current reported. "A total of 9,487,650 pounds of cotton has been ordered for mattresses, and 228,300 pounds of cotton has been ordered for comforters."

All families which have received mattresses are eligible to apply for material with which to make a comforter. Experienced supervisors are on hand in the mattress centers to explain how to make the comforters.

Aluminum Shortage Is Not Serious Now

What looked for a short time like gloomy skies for the aluminum cooking utensil manufacturers affected by priorities cleared a little. A report got out that after their present supplies were exhausted they would get no more of the metal. Manufacturers conferring with defense officials in Washington said they had received no notice of the reported ban, while defense chiefs privately described reports that the cooking utensil people would be "out of business" as "unauthorized and unwarranted." It was said that while aluminum supplies for this purpose would be temporarily curtailed until they may "at times come to zero" nothing like a total ban was contemplated. It was made clear that officials are reluctant to take any extreme action that would threaten any considerable number of jobs.
