A HIT AT THE FARMERS

Republicans in congress are boasting of a great saving to the tax payers by cutting down the appropriations for various purposes. This may mean a saving in money but is not likely to be construed as a step forward in this age of progress and general development. Time will tell.

But in this play to the galleries, so to speak, the republicans are silent in seven languages on the proposition one of their leaders, Representative McFadden, of Pennsylvania, recently inaugurated to tax the Federal Land Bank bonds and the joint stock land bank bonds, now exempted. They are evidently not particularly anxious for the farmers to know that the taxation of such bonds means a higher rate of interest for them to pay, for it is the farmers who would pay this tax.

Democratic representatives direct attention to the fact that such a step would cost the farmers of America millions of dollars, and endanger, if not destroy, the Farm Land bank system, one of the greatest blessings an American congress has ever bestowed on the farmer. If the McFadden idea prevails and the exemption is removed it is believed that the Farm Land banks will either have to go out of business or raise the rate of interest on loans to farmers.

It will be remembered that when a democratic Congress established the Land Bank system, farmers were paying anywhere from eight to fifteen per cent on short term loans, which they were often called upon to renew. Since then they have been borrowing money from the land banks at 5.5 per cent, and for any term they wished from five to forty years. Is it any wonder that the loan sharks, who fattened off the farmers prior to the establishment of the Federal land banks, are clamoring to have a special tax imposed upon these banks? If they succeed their "loan shark" agencies will be reestablished and fleecing the American farmer of millions upon millions of dollars will again become "the order of the day." The republicans have the power to enact the taxing measure mentioned. Will they take the chance?

THE PEOPLE WITH HIM

Discussing the League of Nations on the eve of his departure for France the second time President Wilson said an overwhelming majority of the American people were in favor of it. He was correct in that conclusion and events of the near future will prove that the president had read the public mind aright at that time. And the sentiment has undergone no change. His critics made desperate efforts to make it appear that Mr. Wilson had not correctly interpreted the attitude of the American public, but the people let it be known pretty soon that "an overwhelming majority of them did favor the League and would stand squarely behind him in his effort to bring lasting peace to a sorely troubled world.

In an effort to ascertain the views of the people upon the League Covenant, in their respective communities, a number of newspapers took "straw votes" which resulted in finding as a fact that three out of four persons questioned had declared themselves unqualifiedly in favor of the League. The "feeler" sent out by the Liteary Digest was country-wide. To its inquiry responses promply came from 1,337 editors. 718 of these declared in positive terms, for America's membership in the League; 181 voted against it, and the remainder, 478 in number, answered 'yes, conditionally' which indicated that they favored the plan with some slight modifications.

The Digest's "straw vote" of the daily newspapers showed conclusively that a substantial majority of them, at the time, were unqualifiedly for the League of Nations; that an overwhelming majority favored it with some amendments; that only a small minority opposed America's entering the League, and that the President sized up the situation correctly.

The people were standing with their leader then; they are with him today.
