DAILY SENTINEL.

WM. E. PELL, PROPRIETOR.

Correspondence of the Wilson North Carolinian

LETTER FROM GEORGIA.

Gaston, his Character—Judge Ruffin—Removing the Market House—Exciting Times—A Retreat—Doubtful Statement.

MACON, GA., Nov. 20, 1867.

"Who is that noble old gentleman over the way, just now running and romping with those little children? There is something about him so benign and commanding, yet so truly cordial and pleasant, that I am anxious to learn his name."

"That, sir, is Judge Gaston. All the children love him, and he never seems so happy as when surrounded by a group, tugging at him and asking him all sorts of questions. Let him be ever so much engrossed with his high duties, a genial smile will light up his features if addressed by the children."

But though he was a "good man and a great Judge," his great age warned us that he must ere long quit the shores of time.—And when the sad announcement was made that "Judge Gaston is dead," it was as if the entire population had individually been bereaved. The Judge went from his office on the corner to the Supreme Court room in tolerable health—he returned to his home never to leave it alive.

Perhaps no man ever enjoyed more fully the confidence of those who knew him, than he did. He was true to his friends—enemies he had none. So strong was the public confidence in his integrity, that though in religion he was a Catholic he was unanimously elevated to the chief justiceship of the Supreme Court of the State.

In all the relations of life this eminent Jurist was a model. As a son, he was ever dutiful and obedient. He loved his mother with an almost idolatrous love. Upon graduating at College he was asked if he did not rejoice at being successful. "Oh yes," said he; "but I shall rejoice more when I can tell my mother of my good fortune." As a representative in the Federal Congress, he was ever mindful of the interests of those who sent him there. As a Judge, he was capable and just. His opinions are patterns of clear reasoning and profound learning. As a citizen, plain and unostentatious, he was easy of approach. With Judge B——, he could delve into the mysterious intricacies of the law; with the Rev. C——, he could travel the paths of Theology; and with the tender little boy he could jump the rope or assist in spelling rat, cat, dog, pig or hay. He could be "grave or gay, lively or severe," and none could excel him in the part he took.

I believe his remains were carried to Newbern to be placed in the family vault.

"Yet died he not as men who sink,
Before our eyes to soulless clay;
But, changed to spirit, like a wink
Of summer lightning, passed away.
Weep, children of Israel, weep.

Judge Ruffin, of Orange county, succeeded to the office of Chief Justice on the death of Judge Gaston. He held the position for a number of years, and was a fit successor to so illustrious a man as him in whose place he was called to stand.

Leaving, for a time, the Bench, let me glance at other matters, smacking not quite so much of law.

It was somewhere in 1841 or 1842 that a difficult question was submitted to the free and enlightened voters of Raleigh, to-wit: the removal of the Market House. At that time the aforesaid house stood in that portion of a certain street known as "Grog Alley," and the inhabitants therein knew that if the market was taken away, much of their trade would go elsewhere. They therefore resolved to resist its removal.—This place—Grog-Alley—was the Five-Points of the city. The buildings were one-story shanties, old and dilapidated, and owned or occupied by as desperate a set of men as could be found in a day's ride. The canvass was short but exciting. Each party had in its employ a fifer and a drummer. Every night the respective parties would tug along behind the beloved drum and its screeching associate, until they had thrown themselves outside a sufficient quantity of bust-head, and—out of sight of each other—to make them brag—then, oh! shade of Demosthenes! what speeches, what eloquence they uttered. All at once some one would break the spell by yelling out—"Come boys! Joe's liquor!" Nuff sed. They always obeyed the invitation.

The crisis came at last, however. The ballot box spoke and its decision was in favor of removing the market. Elated at this, the New Market House party began a victorious march through the aforesaid Grog-Alley, accompanied by the inevitable fife and drum. This they knew was the bridge of Lodi. In the market building were congregated the defeated but not vanquished defenders of that odoriferous precinct. There was a halt. Who will lead us? "Follow me!" thundered a well-known voice in front. The columns met—"the combat thickened, on ye brave!" There was such crashing, and splashing; such hewing and cutting; such pulling of wool; such gouging of eyes, and breaking of heads, as has never been seen since the days of old Peter Stuyvesant. Seeing how matters stood, I beat a retreat, and drank to the health and success of my party a good round number of old cognac. Somebody told me, a day or two after my return to the city, that my party cleared the other party out, but after diligent investigation I could find but few who could conscientiously corroborate his statement. But the market was moved and Grog Alley became a place where a man could go in daylight without having his throat cut or pocket book stolen. In due time the old liquor-reeked shanties were torn down, and neat little stores erected in their stead. Thus was swept out a disgrace to the city; but the credit belongs to those who had been made virtuous to that which satisfieth not.

Yours, very truly,

"Sl——."

Every day that there is the mockery of an election in any of the Southern States the telegraph announces that "the election is progressing quietly," thus unconsciously uttering a most biting sarcasm. In view of the fact that every poll is guarded by United States soldiers all around ex-officio, what could be expected but quiet? On the other side, what a severe commentary is the presence of the same military upon the Radical mode of reconstruction. So far as our memory serves us, there has not been in all the Southern States since they were placed under military rule a single instance of disturbance of the peace that was not caused by negroes. Possibly they were not wholly guilty, since in more than one case it has been proven that they were incited to disorderly conduct by their pretended Radical friends. All the letters which we have printed, all the accounts which we have seen, concur in the statement that the white population are anxious for the preservation of perfect peace; in fact, were they otherwise disposed—as they are not—they know that any outbreak, however slight, that can possibly be attributed to them will be hailed with joy by the Northern Radicals, and seized upon as a pretext for fresh legislation of increased severity towards the Southern whites.—N. Y. World.

THE
AMERICAN BITTERS.
The Great Southern Tonic,
AND THE MOST PALATABLE STOMACHIC EVER USED.
FOR THE CURE OF DYSPEPSIA, DISORDERED Digestion, Flatulency, Sluggish Circulation of the Blood, Bilious Complaints arising from a morbid condition of the Stomach and Bowels. An Elegant Tonic is established where of the Digestive Organs, or of the system generally. For the loss of appetite it is the most wholesome and effectual Tonic in the world. It stimulates nature and enables the system to triumph over disease. In unhealthy districts with tremors and general nervous derangement, it is peculiarly adapted, giving strength and tone to the nerves. Indeed to Ladies and Children it is invaluable—and in fact whenever a pleasant and agreeable Tonic is wanted, this should be used.
Dr. Johnston B. Stone, one of the most scientific and well known Physicians, in the southern states, testifies to its great value, as do many others who have been greatly benefited by the use of these Bitters.
