THE SODIER'S TEAR.

Upon the hill he turned
To take the last fond look
Of the valley and the village church,
And the cottage by the brook.
He turned old on the spot
So familiar to his ear,
The soldier leaned upon his sword
And wiped away a tear.

Within the cottage porch
A maid was on her knees,
She held aloft a snow-white scarf,
Which fluttered to the breeze,
She breathed a prayer for him,
A prayer he could not hear,
Yet the soldier blessed her as she knelt,
And wiped away a tear.

He turned and left the spot,
Oh, do not deem him weak,
For dauntless was that soldier's heart,
Though a tear was on his cheek.
Go search in battle's foremost rank,
In danger's dark career,
Be sure the hand most daring there,
He wiped away a tear.

A LAKE COVERED WITH DUCKS.

Many of our readers saw in the Roanoke News Journal, have often heard of Duck Lake. We saw it for the first time last Saturday. It is situated just west of the Pyramid Lake Indian reservation, and immediately south of Pyramid Lake, the two being divided by a strip of land something over a half a mile in width. They have no connection with each other unless underground, and passing entirely around the lake, we could see no other body of water flowing into it. The mouth of the Truckee was a mile off, but it splits, one part going into Pyramid and the other going into Mud Lake to the right and only separated from Pyramid by a range of mountains. Duck Lake, we should judge, was a body of water ten miles wide and five in length. It derives its name from the ducks, which make it their headquarters. Its waters the day we saw it was almost entirely covered. Such a sight we never saw before, or expect to see again.

ALL SORTS OF PEOPLE.

Who are the most disagreeable people? Five write. One will answer, "Those who are irritable or wearily polite." Another, "Those who are serious and suspicious." Still another, "those who are so painfully energetic in word and action as to become repose impossible in their vicinity." Two will say, "Those who are always late." It is true that these qualities which come under the head of finishes rather than of vital renders people most intolerable companions and associates. Parenthetically it may be observed that those whose lives are worn, faded and disorted look thus and other, who have to do with people who make difficulties on every occasion, great or small. It is astonishing how less time practice of making difficulties grows into a confirmed habit of mind, and what distress it occasions. The saver of life is taken out of it when you know that nothing you propose to do or suggest hope for or endeavor, will meet with aught, to encourage an enumeration of the difficulties that will lie in the path you wish to travel.

STRANGE RITES.

According to Mr. Mackenzie Wallace when the approach of cholera is feared, all the village maidens in some parts of Russia gather together at night, in the most retired of the hour, and walk in procession around their village, one girl walking ahead with an iron, the rest following with a plow. The girls make the most strange gestures as to form; but it cannot be changed or they the most find out what is going on, though, if any one is caught taking observations in the same she is considerable beaten it is said by the fair members of the procession. A correspondent says that a very similar ceremony is in vogue in Allahabad, India, when drought is apprehended. On a pleasant night the ryots women, taking a spade and plow, go to a vacant field, generally in a northeast direction from the hamlet, and draw the plow. How, however they do it. Women of infinite curiosity, but we are assured by the performers. Not a soul goes to the midst of the village, and they religiously abstain from violating the ceremony by improper curiosity.

A SKETCH FROM NATURE.

Miss Clarinda was born only two years earlier than her brother Tom. When Tom was ten years of age she claimed because she was twelve. When Tom was known to be fourteen, she confessed to exact sixteen. When Tom proudly boasted of eighteen, the timidly acknowledged herself past nineteen. When he came home from college, with a mustache and a vote, and had a party in honor of his twenty-first birthday, she said to her friends, What a hopeful fellow he is! who would think he was only a year younger than I? And when Tom declared he was twenty-five years and old enough to get married, she said to a gentleman friend: "Do you know I feel savagely jealous to think of Tom getting married. But then, I suppose twins always are more attached to each other as brothers and sisters." And two years later at Tom's wedding, she said, with girlish vivacity, to the wedding guests: "Dear old Tom! to see him married to-night, and then think how, when he was only five years old, they brought him in to see me, his baby sister. I wonder if he thinks of it to-night."

MISTAKEN KINDNESS.

The father who for a great portion of his life has struggled with poverty is unwilling that his children should have a similar experience. So he denies himself indulgences in even necessary things that he may save and make for his family. The mother, remembering how irksome household tasks were to her in her girlhood, permits her daughters to lead lives of ease and indolence, thinking that in so doing she makes the best manifestations in her power of maternal love. As a natural consequence of this view on the part of the parents, we see growing up all around us young men and women perfectly useless for all the practical purposes of life—unable to cope with misfortune. Intellectual or moral force is not inherent; it must be built up from within, and is the result of independent thought and action. The sooner a boy can be made to wait upon himself, to think for himself, to act for himself, the sooner will the germs true manhood begin to develop within him. It is no kindness to surround him with such attention and care that he will not be compelled to learn the lesson of self-reliance, of patient industry, of persistent hope. The real crowns of this world are crowns of labor.

Talk about the angry sea and the mad waves, and all that. Humph! you'd be merry, too, were you crossed as often as the ocean is.

HE DIDN'T DRINK.

While Mr. Hawkins was raking up some leaves which had blown into his front yard the other day, an aged individual walked up, leaned on the fence, and said:

"Hey, there, mister!"

Mr. Hawkins turned quickly around and walked over to the paling to ascertain the wants of the visitor.

"I just want to see if I can't get a little help. I've walked from Kalamazoo and ain't had nuthin' to eat for three days."

He was evidently a tramp, and Mr. Hawkins eyed him suspiciously, until he broke in:

"That's just the way; nobody believes me when I tell a straight story. I know you think I'm a murderer and a tramp and a loafer, but I can tell you I aint; I work when I can get a show."

"I think you want to buy drink," said Mr. Hawkins.

"Indeed I don't, sir," responded the tramp with great emphasis. "I never drink a drop."

"What you never drink?"

"Never sir!"

"Not even wine?" queried Hawkins.

"No sir!"

"No beer, either?"

"Nor beer either!" protested the tramp.

"Nor Robinson County whisky?"

"Nor whisky, sir!"

Then said Mr. Hawkins, I can do nothing for you. Daniel Webster used to drink and you're no better than he was and I think myself. Any man who comes out openly and denounces Robinson County whisky can't have any assistance from me.

Then the tramp hobbled off a sadder but a wiser man.

A human friend—The baby.

An old march—The march of time.

A trance action—Waiting in your sleep.

Corpses are said to be feeling mediums.

A locomotive uses forty-five gallons a mile.

Gold is stronger than iron, both pieces being the same in weight.

Jones, whose income was separated at the coming of spring in high praise of that season, thought he was he shall never cease to speak of the treatment of him.—Boston Transcript.

Portifices are among the things that write.—Boston Transcript. Yes and yes there are among the things that are.—Hackett. Yes; horses are among the things that neigh.—Detroit Free Press. Yes, and dogs are among the things that bark.

What can equal laughter? A good laugh does not really is better than a whole apothecary's shop of medicine. It is a sort of wind-fan; it makes the cobwebs out of a man's brains and dispersions from the mind more effectually than either champagne or the pills.

"Speaking at random," said the obsequious barber, as he tendered change for a quarter, "I believe Adam and Eve were co-heir heirs, aren't they, sir?" The customer raised his head, and demanded to know if he was Adam to make another joke like that.

"Darcy," he said, "I think I was telling you after I came home last night about the necessity of some refreshment in our expeditions—was I not?"

"Well, I can't recollect, John," she answered, musingly, "turn to the ph[illegible]."

He did so, and all it said was: "Wanted—[illegible]—maze of Wooster mazzel Andrew's Bazar."

A new, plaintive and tender poem begins with:

"Woe must we then be sad
When nature is so glad."

We must not if we don't want to. We can sit down "Yankee Doodle" or "Hail Columbia" if we feel like it. When Nature is so cheerful in the gloom of an approaching rainstorm, and a poor poet does not know where to borrow an umbrella, and his best hat and newly dyed coat on then is the time for anguish that is unspeakable in prose.
