THE ROANOKE NEWS.

THURSDAY, JULY 3 1879.

We are indebted for public documents to Hon. R F. Armfield.

Hon. D. F. Davis, of Corinth was nominated on the third ballot for Governor of Maine by the Republicans on the 26th.

The Sultan has ordered the Khedive of Egypt to abdicate, and he has done so. Prince Tewefek, his son and heir, is his successor. The abdication is the result of European diplomacy.

The President has vetoed the judiciary appropriation bill on the ground that it took from him the power to execute laws which have not been repealed, and that as long as a law remains on the statute books he should have the means of enforcing it. A majority of Senators are in favor of passing the bill without any riders, and going to the country on the issue, and this also seems to be the opinion of many of the representatives We are willing to abide by the course adopted by the Democrats in Washington, but it seems to us, they have been yielding long enough. Why not refuse any appropriation at all, and let the government stop. If the Republicans can stand it we can.

ORGANIZATION.

The matters of importance and interest to every man in the county, which will be transacted at the meeting of the board of magistrates in August will doubtless carry a large number of our citizens to Halifax on that day. Would it not be well for a convention to be called for that day, and an organization of the Democratic party be effected for the campaign of 1880

Nothing can succeed without some plan, agreed upon, and understood, by by all who have a part to execute; and it would hardly be premature to begin in August. We must have organization, without it there is no systematic work, no co-operation, no unity. With it a great deal can be done, and it is our duty to do what we can, to help in the great struggle which will take place next year between Democracy and honest government on one side, and Republicanism and corruption on the other.

A law was enacted by the legislature in March last, authorizing the organization of a board of health in each county. The board is to be composed of all physicians in the county who are elegible to be members of the State Medical Society, the chairman of the board of commissioners, the mayor of the county town, and the county surveyor. This board shall elect a county superintendent of health, who shall have charge of the poor house, jail and other public institutions. He shall make all post-mortem examinations for inquests and shall abate all nuisances. He shall also have control of all in—land quarantine. This office is an important one; and the peysicians of the county should hold a meeting and elect one of their number to the position. It would be of great service in case of epidemic and will in any event improve the sanitary condition of the county. The Legislature has provided the means and the authority, and given the opportunity and it is now the duty of the physicians to carry out the plan. We hope they will see the importance of doing so, and will call a meeting at an early day We believe a county Medical Society was formed several years ago, and it would be easy enough for its President or Secretary to call the physicians together, and see what course should be pursued.

FOURTH OF JULY.

To-morrow is the fourth of July, once celebrated over the whole land, in every village and cross roads. The military and civic bodies turned out and vied with each other in display. Dinners were given, speeches made, and music enlivened the occasion. All this was done to celebrate our independence from an oppressive yoke. It was indeed years ago a glorious day. The children even, caught enthusiasm from their fathers, and the patriotism of the whole people was aroused. All this was before the war.

And now, what a change. Only in three or four places will there be celebrations. The South has no heart to take part in it. What is the use of celebrating an independence which does not exist? Why should the South honor, what is to her, a shadow? She cannot do it, and it would be a mockery to attempt it, when that independence has been fought for and lost at the expense of many whose places at the fireside cannot be filled, and whose bones lie uncovered in the valley of Virginia. It would ill become the South to celebrate to-morrow, with the tears not yet dry, and the garments of mourning not yet laid aside. What care we for an independence which is only a name? and a name too, in which so many crimes are committed. No, Let the people at the North make merry. We at the South have no heart for it and will look on in silence.

The President has vetoed the bill making appropriations to pay United States marshals. This veto is based on the ground that the bill should not restrict his right to enforce laws not yet repealed. The truth of the matter is, that the Republicans, intend to oppose all measures, which will take away any of their chances of success. And this, whether or not those measures are for the good of the country, whether or not they are unconstitutional, whether or not the powers which those measures seek to curtail, are abused. The Republican party knows no country, no statesmanship, knows nothing that does not tend to the advancement of their partisan schemes. To them party supremacy is law and nothing will prevent them from doing every thing in their power right or wrong, that will help the party.

The Democratic party has had up hill work ever since it has gotten control of Congress, to pass good laws, and such as will maintain the purity of elections. They have attempted to promote the welfare of the people and to take away illegal powers which have been assumed by the executive, and every effort is met by a veto from Mr. Hayes. Now let them exercise their veto power a little, and say to the stalwarts we have done all we could and you have impeded us, now we will do nothing else. If you want appropriations you must take them on our terms or you will not get them. Let them do this and if the Republicans refuse, adjourn and come home, and if the President convenes them in extra session again, let them go back and act on the same policy again. We suppose, the Democrats in Congress fear that such action on their part will do the party harm in the elections of next year. If so, let it be so. The odds will be against us if the deputy marshals are allowed to control the ballot boxes. On the one hand we will have deputy marshals to work against, on the other, we will have to contend against the effect produced by a refusal to make appropriations with riders.

With all due respect to the Democrats in Congress, with whose course we will be satisfied whatever it may be, we prefer to risk defeat without being bull-dosed, than to be browbeaten without improving matters.

As Senator Vance has said "if the Democrats in Congress cannot show to the people that Hayes is to blame for starving the government, then they do not deserve success. Conciliation has been tried and proved a failure, now see what virtue there is firmness. Refuse to pass the appropriation bills and let the Republicans make the most of it.

LAMAR AND CONKLING

The following graphic picture of these two Senators is drawn by the Louisville Courier-Journal:

"No man in America has a sweeter, gentler, more womanish nature than Lamar. He is a dreamer, a poet. His life has been passed among books. He was long a college professor. Just enough of active, practical experience, as a soldier and as a traveller, he has had to give him somewhat of the knowledge of a politician and man of the world. But he makes a poor figure in either character; he is a statesman and a philosopher—a man of profound convictions—and owes his great place in popular esteem to his genius, sustained by physical and moral courage of so high an order that his enemies respect him. All men, who know him at all, know him to be incapable of premeditated discourtesy or offense. Known to be a fearless man, he never had a difficulty or altercation in his life; and nothing short of the intolerable insolence of Mr. Conkling could have stung him into the kind of rejoinder which he made.

"And who is Mr. Conkling? The country knows him chiefly through the description of Mr. Blaine. But it is not so familiar with him as his colleagues. Mr. Conkling is a brilliant actor. The offspring of a dung-hill, he has the cuteness of the horse-jockey; but, having the physique of a butcher and the voice or an oratorical vender of wart cures, he set up for an office-seeker, and has, by hook and-crook-educating himself as he progressed—come to be, not merely a Senator, but a surprisingly good stage-player. Vulgar by nature—and rapidly growing very coarse and common in his exterior—the result of habits which are no longer a secret at Washington—he has for two or three years attempted to make up his moral and intellectual losses by mere swagger. Selecting for the victims of his rage an entire people, instead of a single individual, he has, like the poor coward that he is, strutted his strut, exploding his miscellaneous vulgarity at long range, but carefully avoiding to tread upon approximate toes. This sort of thing generally comes to grief.

"Of course the Republican press will take another view of it. Yet there is not a Republican editor, who has sense enough to carry him to Washington and back, who does not know that Conkling is what we have represented him. More than this, he is as corrupt a hound as ever sat in Congress, for there are dozens of people who have more reason to suspect that he was willing to sell himself to the Democrats for a piece in '76?"

A SOUTHERNER IN NEW YORK.

ROGER PRYOR AND HIS GREAT SUCCESS —EXAMPLE FOR YOUNG LAWYERS.

[N. Y. Correspondence St. Louis Republican.]

In passing, I may add that General Pryor has proved how well a southern man can succeed in New York, for he is conceded now one of the most brilliant men at the New York bar, with a large and lucrative practice on his hands. The war swept away every vestige of his property, and at the return of peace he found himself with a family of seven children and without a dollar. Then he was not a lawyer; for no sooner had he put up his shingle when he was a young man than he was taken up by the Virginians and sent to Congress and kept there. An advertisement of a furnished house was the singular fact which led him to New York. He had no friends there on whom he could calculate for aid, but this was no obstacle, as it was not his temperament to be dependent upon any one. The editor of the Freeman's Journal sought out the southerner, and on learning that he was casting about for work advised him to begin the practice of law, remembering the forensic ability displayed by Pryor in Congress Ben Wood of the Daily News, put Gen. Pryor's name down on his list of salaried editorial writers, and told him to accept the salary as long as it was useful and to write when he felt like it. General Pryor borrowed the law books which he needed to do justice to his clients, and he studied as he fought—bravely. No man has burned the midnight oil more, and from being no lawyer at all twelve years ago, he has grown to be a most accomplished and erudite member of the bar. In his great speech in the trial of Tilton against Beecher, in resisting the attempt of William M. Evarts, of Beecher's counsel, to prevent the plaintiff estifying, General Pryor hurled law at the head of the present Secretary of State, which the latter in all of his delving had not reached, and Mr. Evarts relaxed his frigidity to warmly compliment General Pryor not only upon the brilliant presentation of the law, but upon his extended acquaintance with the authorities. General Pryor's speech won the point for Tilton. Last week before the Court of Appeals, General Pryor, in arguing the case against the Brooklyn aldermen, who were endeavoring to keep Congressman Daniel O'Reilly a member of their Board at the same time that he was serving at Washington, made an argument which the judges of the Court of Appeals pronounced as surpassing powerful and eloquent, and which elicited a letter of praise from the Attorney-General of the State, who was a casual spectator. It is the habit of General Pryor not to take a case unless he believes he can win it. He established the novel point in the courts of this city some time ago that it was cruelty within the meaning of the law for a man to falsely accuse his wife of infidelity, and he made that the basis of a suit for a limited divorce, which he won. Seven hours a day he studies law as though he needed it all on the morrow, and his researches are in the elemental book for the principles, the ramifications of which he follows throughout all legal lore. No man in New York has a more brilliant future, and no man has so completely carved out his own way and made his own fortune. The politicians have been after General Pryor as a good man to keep on hand to win with, but a studious lawyer and New York politician are not natural companions. General Pryor has never taken even the first step toward political preferment, and to-day rests under the political disabilities imposed upon him at the close of the war, which he has never sought to have removed although he needed but to ask to be freed from them. The South can be proud of this representative southerner in New York, and, indeed, his old congressional district has several times sought to secure his consent to a re-election to Congress.

The Invention of the Age.

It does not destroy the draft. It does not interfere with cleaning the tubes. It will not choke up, and requires no cleaning.

It requires no direct dampers to be opened when raising steam (dampers being objectionable, as they may be left open and allow sparks to escape)

It requires no water to extinguish sparks, which, by condensation, destroys the draft. Besides, when water is used, if neglected, the efficiency is destroyed by evaporation of the water, and the boiler is kept in a filthy condition.

It is simple and durable and can be relied upon. It can be attached to any boiler. No planter should be without one of them. Insurance companies will insure gins and barns where the Talbott Engines and Spark-Arresters are used at same rate as charged for water or horse-power.
