VOL. IV. RALEIGH, N. C., MONDAY, OCTOBER 5, 1868. NO. 46.

The Daily Sentinel.

WM. E. PELL, PROPRIETOR.

From the New York Tribune, of Monday.

INTERVIEW WITH THE HON. B. H. HILL.

A representative of the Tribune called on the Hon. Benjamin H. Hill, of Georgia, at his hotel, and, during a long and interesting interview, that gentleman expressed the opinions of which a synopsis is given below; "My opinion of the Reconstruction policy of Congress is, that its successful establishment will totally ruin the South. It will demoralize society, disorganize labor, and destroy confidence. Georgia will vote the Democratic ticket, the whites having a decided majority, as well as the support of large numbers of the negroes. But in many portions of the South, the negroes are in such large majority that evil disposed white men can control enough of them to secure the offices; but the means by which the negroes are so controlled and influenced are such as engender among them absolute hatred of the white race. As a result of this hatred, we of the South are in constant dread, and cannot leave our wives and children alone with safety or confidence."

In reply to a query about the prevailing opinion in the South on the suffrage question, Mr. Hill said: "I think our people would have accepted impartial suffrage as a compromise and finality. They do not object to negro suffrage because they hate or would oppress the negro, but for the reason that they consider their late slaves incapable of understanding it at once, and fear that they would become (as they have become) tools in the hands of wicked and designing white men. Thus, by giving suffrage to the negro, he is made utterly worthless as a laborer, and dangerous to the peace of our society. Our people, having become impoverished by the war, desire now to recuperate. They can do so only by cultivating their lands, and for that purpose need the negro as a laborer. It is their interest, therefore, to be kind to him. I know the Republican party could have commanded the white vote of the South after the surrender, if they had pursued a different policy towards our people. Those of us down there who had opposed secession always charged that the Democratic party would bring about disunion, and that disunion meant destruction. The facts turned out as we predicted. We also told the people that the party opposing the Democracy did not hate the Southern people, and would not do them an injustice.—But the reconstruction policy destroyed the confidence which otherwise might have been felt, and for this, I do believe all the evils of secession would have been charged by the people on the Democracy, and the white vote of the South would have been largely against that party. But this reconstruction policy of suddenly disfranchising whites and giving the ballot to ignorant negroes, and the plan of forcing these things upon us, threaten to fulfill the worst picture ever drawn by the most rabid secessionist."

As to the Republican candidate for President, Mr. Hill said that the Southern people do not dislike Gen. Grant. His deportment towards Gen. Lee at the time of the surrender at Appomattox, and his vindication of the Southern people to the President in 1865, made him a favorite with them; so much so in fact, that he could have gained their consent to any honorable terms. Regarding the re-establishment of slavery, Mr. Hill remarked that much misapprehension exists in the North respecting the Southern opinion on that subject.—He asserted that Southerners would vote the proposition down almost unanimously, because they have found slavery too costly to be maintained against the sentiment of mankind. In case emancipation results unfavorably to the negro, however, the Southern people will not feel themselves responsible for it.

In reply to a query as to the causes for the rejection by the South, of the Constitutional amendment, (14,) he said: We rejected it solely because it disfranchised our leading men for doing, what the people, by their votes, had requested them to do. Beside, it disfranchises the very men who did their best to prevent secession, and leaves open a road for the worst secessionists to become Republicans, thus not only repudiating their own past career, but deceiving the party which receives them. They only join to have their disabilities removed.

Mr. Hill said that the financial question excites but little interest among the Southern people. They believe that if the Union can be restored and the resources of the country fully developed, the currency can be brought up to par, and the national debt liquidated when it becomes due; but if the Union is restored in bale and by force, and the South is thus made incapable of recovering, the resources of the country cannot be developed, the government cannot be economically administered, and will be subverted long before the bonds fall due, and then they will never be paid at all. They think that capitalists should by all means oppose the reconstruction measures, because (and here Mr. Hill was very emphatic) the South can never have either safety, peace or prosperity under those measures.

When the election throughout the South was alluded to, Mr. Hill said: "The South will vote for Seymour only because he is pledged to relieve us of this measure, and enable us to recover our property and preserve our peace. We expect this relief to come peaceably and by lawful means. We would not have it otherwise, because it is to preserve the peace that we ask relief from these measures."

In relation to the recent expulsion of the negro members from the Georgia Legislature, he gave it as his opinion that under the reconstruction laws of Congress, they were entitled to their seats, but that at the same time the Legislature had power to pass a law disqualifying them. Their expulsion, he said, could not have been accomplished without the connivance of the Republican members. It has no great effect on the whites, but the blacks are considerably affected by it, for they have lost their confidence in the men who proclaimed themselves their friends.

Mr. Hill does not believe in the existence of the Ku Klux Klan—at least not as a Southern institution; he said there had undoubtedly been "demonstrations," but his belief was that they had invariably been incited by Republicans in order to give Northern men a wrong impression of Southern opinion.

When the question was asked, "What would the negroes do if Seymour and Blair were elected?" Mr. Hill said that he had no doubt they would quietly submit. Their condition in that event would be fully as good as under the present rule, and they would become of more use to the country as laborers.

When asked whether he proposed to aid in the canvass of his State, he answered that he did not, for the reason that the state of public feeling is such that but little agitation would fan the present excitement into serious troubles. "In fine," said he, "the people anticipate fearful riots on the eve of the election."

As our reporter was about to take his leave, Mr. Hill said: "I wish to state that I am convinced there is in the South an organized scheme to provoke collisions between the whites and blacks, for the purpose of inflaming the minds of the Northern people, its prime movers being Radicals."

Mr. Hill's manner of speaking is very collected and deliberate, and his opinions are evidently the result of deep thought.
