The Daily Sentinel.

The Northern Press on the Election.

As our readers will no doubt desire to see the indications of Northern sentiment on both sides in regard to the result of the Presidential election, and to the probable policy of the President elect, we surrender a portion of our space to citations from a number of the leading newspapers.

The New York Herald, after quoting Grant's motto—"Let us have peace"—says:

"We believe in the time when these words convert into action the olive branch substituted for the sword in the Southern States, negro supremacy quietly superseded, and such measures adopted as will create harmony out of discord in that social and financial position of our country comprised in the States now suffering from a mistaken and vindictive policy.

"It expresses great confidence in General Grant, and predicts that his policy will be its exact opposite of that of his predecessor, that he will reduce taxation and lighten the burdens of the people, and that he will be able to carry out his policy without any great difficulty. The Herald concludes by proclaiming that this great trying hour," that the Democracy are

"Secure in protecting the future of our country, and of moulding her magnificent destinies when treason shall have been purged and moulded for that imperial task."

And expresses

"An unshaken and unshakable confidence in its puissant and undying youth, which out of disaster will get discipline, out of misfortune, patience and unconquerable courage, out of blunders, wisdom and a settled will.

"To this great work, here and now, upon a battlefield which has been lost, do we invite beneath undishonored standards, the youth, the manhood of our time."

The Journal of Commerce gives no political indications.

The New York Sun thinks that

"One of the first objects to which the new Administration will turn its attention, will be the completion of the task of reconstruction, the pacification of the South, and the restoration of order and security to that suffering portion of the Union."

It hopes to

"See the lapsed states now outside of the Union restored to their relations to the Government during the approaching session of Congress. We entreat that body to hasten the completion of the work, so that when Gen. Grant shall take the President's oath, every [illegible] with hardihood inquire from the banner that waves over his head. If, however, it shall be delayed till he enters the White House, we are sure he will push it to completion immediately for he is sure that the [illegible] of seeing the object [illegible] of the country instantly removed out of the way."

The Sun threatens that if

"Embittered by the School of Hampton, Forrest, Wise, Semmes and Toombs, continue their assaults upon a Government which has magnanimously spared their lives, and shall not instantly retrain from stimulating arson and murder and cognate crimes, the loyal people of the nation will demand that they be tried by court-martial for violating their paroles, or by criminal tribunals for treason; and if convicted, that they be banished from the country or put to death."

The Evening Post says:

"That reason has not fled from the old ruling element of the South, and that under the firm, sagacious, just and liberal administration of General Grant, the sober masses will turn a deaf ear to political agitation and violent counsels, and devote themselves to industry, thrift, to the revival of agriculture, to the founding of manufactures, to the establishment of commerce, and to the encouragement of common schools, so that they may become the most populous, enterprising, and wealthy portion of the Union."

The Northern Independent says:

"As to the new administration, all we have to say is, that our course, and that of the people, will be regulated by its acts."

Should the new administration be conducted under the inspiration of "the Congressional Jacobins," the Intelligencer will oppose it all hazards and to the last extremity; but says that Journal:

"It is possible, however, that Gen. Grant may, on taking the Presidential chair, remember that he is the President of a whole people, the oath which he will be called on to take on that day may be to him a call and direct responsibility; the names and characters of Washington, of Madison, Monroe, and the other great patriots who have filled this high office, may crowd thick upon his memory, and he may feel an honorable ambition to quit the chair with the love, the respect, and the veneration of all his countrymen. Such thoughts may come with the position, and if they shall guide his conduct they may bear a nobler harvest than the bitter fruit of an hour of passionate, treasonable, political struggle. We should be among the first to hail such a spirit, and shall only be too happy to admit, along with the American people, if such an event, that what now seems to us a great public calamity has been transmuted into blessing. If liberty, the Constitution, the just rights of the white race, and peace be restored, we shall be only too profoundly rejoiced to care more whether the hands by which this has been accomplished are of unknown or of adverse party."

Forney's Chronicle says:

"If we should be asked to indicate in few words the significance of their verdict, we should say that it means this. It puts the seal of final and irrevocable condemnation upon the doctrines of secession; it stops any future attempt to destroy the Union; it pronounces the funeral of slavery, and buries all its incidents in the same grave with it, and it declares the eternal devotion of the American people to those free principles which our fathers adopted as cardinal political truths."

The Philadelphia Press hopes that the popular decision

"Will be promptly and cheerfully obeyed, and that henceforth the elements of disorder and disaffection will bow to the will of the mighty North."

It adds:

"From this hour the wounds of our torn and bleeding land begin to heal. Disunion shall rend us no more. Treason, no longer brooding evil distempers and convulsion, shall blight the commercial and business interests of the nation. The altar fires of industry shall be lighted on forge and furnace throughout the length and breadth of the land. Credit and confidence shall spring up in every community. The golden harvests shall smile from sea to sea, and the North and South, East and West, [illegible]

The Press claims that one meaning of the election as follows:

"It means the uplifting of the strong arm of the nation, bringing life to the hunted and insulted white Union men of the South, and justice to the colored men who hold the bond and pledge of the country for civil rights and liberty."

The Baltimore Gazette says:

"Gen. Grant has now an opportunity before him such as is accorded to but few men in the lives of nations. If he is the man of comprehensive intellect and patriotic impulses that his friends assert him to be, he can quickly sweep away the embarrassments which now surround the country, and restore her again to her olden prosperity. It behooves the Democratic party to hold fast to this last hope. With General Grant it rests to restore or to overthrow forever our time-honored Republic. The Democratic party then should cease to judge him further for the present, and look with anxious solicitude for the first indications of his capacity and his intention to save the country."

The Commercial, of the same city, says:

"General Grant is now entitled to receive every reliable and patriotic support, and we hope that the Democratic party will do first as in their power, support and sustain him. He has had the wisdom to keep his own counsels, to hold his tongue between his teeth, and now, unpledged to any party, and uncommitted to any policy, he becomes President of the United States.

"His election may be made the triumph of real conservative sentiments, for though the candidate of Radical extremists, and elevated by that party, he had to be taken by them, notwithstanding the uniform conservatism that marked his course of conduct, as well during the war as since the return of peace. No single sentiment of extreme Radicalism could be extorted from him even [illegible] the purpose of most excited canvass. His simple "Let us have peace" was a conservative inspiration upon the Chicago platform, indicating but little sympathy with the extreme views of Radical leaders."

The Baltimore Sun says:

"We must take a new point of departure, and, dismissing from our contemplation the things which are behind, press forward to the labors and to the rewards of a new era of fraternal and national prosperity. Mr. John Quincy Adams has declared his belief that the heartfelt desire of the great bulk of the Northern people is to treat the South with kindness and generosity, and the opportunity is now offered in General Grant's election, to give strong, and practical expression to that desire.

* * * * "The solution of all difficulties is not so much in any particular legislative policy as in the spirit which animates legislation, and if this spirit be honestly patriotic and fraternal, if, in the words of General Grant, "let us have peace," shall indicate the abandonment of a vindictive policy, the future regeneration and salvation of the country will be put beyond all doubt. Any other course, while it may gratify the passions of unappeasable revenge against the South, will be purchased at the indefinite detriment and cost of those material interests which are of supreme concern to all sections. Forbearance, moderation and patience should be the controlling sentiment of all sections."
