MILL WRIGHT.
AFTER AN EXPERIENCE OF TWENTY years in my business, I offer my services to the public, to build Mills, and set in running order Circular Saw Mills now in use, both double and single; simultaneous and independent setting Screw Headblocks, two or more combined and the best friction feed in use. It is operated with a single lever, in front of the saw on the outside the carriage, thus saving one hand in the Mill. The double mill requires about one half the power to cut the same amount of Lumber, as the single Mill requires.
I will also put up Cotton Gins, Corn and Flour Mills.

SPURIOUS SOLDIERS.

Suspicion is being aroused among many soldiers by the appearance of persons in prime as officers of the service, of whom few ever knew anything, and that nothing good, styling themselves as of the Army "of the Potomac," "of the Gulf," and so on.—The truth is that the associations sought to be formed from the real officers of these armies have been made ridiculous by the eruption to the surface of ci-devant heroes—by names, Cochrane, Churnh, Spinola, Sargent, Burge, Hubbard, &c. — of whom nobody knows, and for whom militarily, nobody will vouch. They have quite crowded such modest men—yet mighty fighters—as McClellan, Meade, Slocum, Warren, Hancock, and Hooker to the wall, and have taken bodily possession of Admirals Farragut and Bailey, wholly against their will.

The men we have named, and most of their convivial colleagues, are of those who went into the war early and came out early and with no increase to their reputation, unless nothing to nothing can be added. Their double object seems to be, to keep alive the embers of civil war and to celebrate themselves. They are as furious as all non-combatants in time of peace.—The few actual soldiers who have been cajoled or coerced into their "associations" are likely to be careful and speedy to get out of such discreditable company. As to celebrating themselves, that is indeed comical. History will celebrate them, or not, as they deserve, and, as the late Mr. Lincoln said, "will tight them down in honor or dishonor." But do these self-celebrants suppose that their hisses at Blair and the gallant men he mentioned will extinguish the latter? Will not "Lee, Johnston, and Jackson be heard of" just as much as and in better light than many of those who hissed their names? For instance, Lee invaded Pennsylvania; so did Sheridan the Shenandoah Valley. The first assailed an army; the second burnt barns and standing crops, and boasted that he "had left the country as bare as the palm of a baby's hand." Which is the manlier and more Christianly? Compare Johnston and Jackson with Butler, Banks, and Neal Dow.—What warfare on women and children and spoons and plate and pianos stains the records of the former? Bah! gentlemen, your hisses are but the anticipation of what posterity will give you.

A CINCINNATI CHAP TAKES A TURCO RUSSIAN BATH IN NEW YORK.

The following extract from a private letter of a Cincinnati chap to a friend describes the Turco-Russian bath, in which he indulged a few days ago. Visiting the famous establishment of Gibson, on Thirteenth street and Broadway, he was induced to try the luxury; but finding the mercury at ninety in the shade, played shy of hot steam until taken by friendly force and shoved into the concern. He says:

"My friend insisted, ushered me into a room not unlike an ordinary bathing-house with doors on either side, and shoving me into one, turned the key and told me to undress. I found I was in for it, and made the necessary preparation. A Russian, in the costume of Eden, escorted me into a large room filled with lounges and gentlemen in the most primitive attire. A flight of marble steps brings me to a door in the wall, which is opened, and I am taken in. The door closed, I begin to gasp like a fish pulled out of water. I am in a cloud of hot steam. I rush for the door to escape for life. The Russian seizes me by the arm and hisses something about having seen girls do the same thing. He conducts me along a balcony surrounding a swimming bath thirty feet square and five feet deep. Still gasping, a refreshing shower of cold water on my head condenses the steam and I breathe again. Conducted still farther, I am showered again and taken into a higher and better room, lined with marble lounges on an ascending scale.

"I mount to one of the highest and lie down on my back. A sponge dipped in cold water is placed beneath my head. A vessel filled with cold water and a sponge is placed at my side, and I am told to use it plentifully on my place. The steaming process is now in full blast. I calculate the distance to the door, expecting to make a rush for it, or to die of suffocation. I feel like a boiled lobster. Discovering that breathing through the cold sponge relieves me, I apply it freely, and a delicious sensation of being cooked through without it hurting me a bit is mine.

"Lying in this state for several minutes, I see through the rocky steam several human lobsters shelved away like myself, while others, more used to the atmosphere, strolled about the floor, getting cooked as they walked.

"My cook, having at length decided that I was sufficiently 'done,' invited me to a lower lounge, where I underwent an elegantly manipulation decidedly agreeable to my parboiled epidermis. Being thus gravied, I thought I was to be 'served up,' when I was only plunged in the swimming bath and invited to cool off. My sensations now were indescribably delightful. A shower of tepid water fell upon my bath-cooled body, and I was conducted to the door of exit, where a second Russian, towel in hand, appeared, and, wiping me dry, placed me on a sheeted lounge, where he commenced a series of manipulations, with a soft and dexterous hand, that suggested a mesmeric operation, from which I arose rejuvenated and refreshed, and feeling as though a very small pair of wings would have been large enough to carry me away up among the birds."

(From the Weekly Sun.)

STEAM PLOWS.

Mr. Olaf Hussey, a Baltimorean, was the inventor of the first successful machine for reaping grain by horse power; and it will be remembered how, some twelve years ago, he exhibited and put in operation, on the grounds of the Maryland State Agricultural Society, the Pioneer Steam Plow. He received a medal from the society, and the following year, we believe it was, received a medal from the United States Agricultural Society, at its exhibition at Chicago, for the successful working shown there. What became afterwards of Mr. Hussey's plow, or whether any of those now in use are built after his model, we are not informed. He unhappily lost his life shortly after by a road accident, and his name has entirely disappeared from among the intelligent and ingenious machinists of Baltimore.

The steam plow is by degrees coming into successful operation. In a late number of the Utica Herald we find it stated that in the United States there are in operation one in Indiana, one in Kentucky, one in Texas, and three in Louisiana; while there are said to be two thousand in use in England, and four hundred in Egypt.

The Mark Lane Express, speaking lately of the trial of steam cultivators at the Leicester show of the Royal Agricultural Society of England, said that "no one could examine the work done without being convinced that the soil was turned up and left to lie under the best possible circumstances calculated to allow the atmospheric influences, the best of all cultivators, to act upon the whole mass, and to leave it after an autumn and a winter in that condition in which very little working by other implements would be needed."

The Royal Agricultural Society of England having appointed committees to visit divit different sections of country where steam culture had been introduced, received from them a report in which there was a unanimous expression of opinion that "by the steam plow the soil is worked much deeper than is possible by animal power, and that by deepening the soil larger crops were obtained and of better quality.

In these reports the experience of several farmers was given. One, on a farm of 300 acres of arable land, used to plow four inches, now, by steam, plows from seven to nine inches. The land is warmer, dryer, and the crops larger and finer. Another says a farm of 630 acres used to require a pair of stout horses to plow four or five inches. Now the drainage is better, and the soil permanently improved with a decided increase of crops. Another says, not only is the yield of wheat increased about four bushels per acre, but its quality improved and its market value increased.—Another occupies 1,000 acres of arable and 200 of pasture land, uses Fowler's fourteen horse power four furrow plow and sixture cultivator. The advantages are, improved drainage, cheaper tillage, seasonable performance of the operations, and increased yields. Still another is enabled to turn up deep subsoil to the depth of fifteen to eighteen inches. He claimed greatly increased yields, one fourth more per acre of wheat than barley.

The impediment to the extensive use of the steam plow is the heavy first cost.—American manufacturers will soon find a way, perhaps, to cheapen them.
