LIFE'S MYSTERY.

We bid our friends "Good-bye"
We see them crossing to that other shore,
And though we may not greet them ever more,
We have no cause to sigh.

We dare not wish them back;
For there is rest, and here a weeping round
Of heart-rending cares that know no bound.
Reset them on their track

Need we be selfish seem,
That we could stand beside the open grave
Of our dear friends in peaceful sleep, and crave
To wake them from their dream?

Is Heaven very dear,
So richly glowing with a golden sheen,
That we should longing linger on the scene,
And wish it ever near

Is there for human eyes
No fairer land than this domain of ours,
No sweeter music or more fragrant flowers,
No land of Paradise?

In mystery we hope;
The path into the future is so dark,
Our thoughts are but a ceaseless hunt and seek
So blindly do we grope.

And so we firmly cleep
The little treasure we have learned to love,
Rather than fly to that we know not of
So far beyond our grasp.

O, mystery unsolved—
Shall ever human presence reach a height
To clearly see by what decree of right
God's problems are evolved?

SPRIGHTLY SPARKS.

Youth should be a saving bank.

Experience is the extract of suffering.

Poetry comes nearer the vital truth than history.

Wisdom is to the soul what health is to the body.

The dignity of truth is lost with much protesting.

Honors come by diligence, riches spring from economy.

The heart has reasons that reason does not understand.

The man who never excites envy never excites admiration.

What we need most to realize the ideal is to idealize the real.

That which is bitter to be endured may be sweet to be remembered.

The noble passion, true love, contains the elements of self-sacrifice.

Suffering itself does not less affect the sentient than the fear of suffering.

A fool may have his gold, but it is a fool's goal still.

Never listen to other people, for if you do you may forget what you say yourself.

A little boy, proud of his new jacket, informed his sister that he was a six-million kid.

When a man has twins born to him it is quite natural that he should feel like telling the date.

Misunderstandings are for more different things than people would imagine, to have arisen in friendship.

Never does a man portray his own character more vividly than in his manner of portraying another's.

It is a singular freak which ladies have, that of making their new bonnets match everything but their husbands' pocket books.

"What have you been doing since I last saw you?" "I've been attending a course of free lectures." "Yes, I was married a week after we parted."

When Adam got tired naming his descendants, he said: "Let the rest be divided into two parts, calling the one part Smith and the other Jones."

J. W. Riley has a poem on "The Lost Kiss." He doesn't make it very plain as to how he lost it; but it is presumed her mother came in just in time to catch him at it.

Doctor—"Well, Pat, have you taken the box of pills I sent you?" Pat—"Yes, sir, be jaber. I have! but I don't feel any better yet, may be the lid hasn't come off yet!"

By putting an "r" in the wrong place a Richmond printer made the editor say of a scene at the close of a burial: "Disconsolate fiend stood riveted on the spot."

It is rather unpleasant to hear a public speaker remark, "My friend-sur I wish to say a few words-ur on this occasion-ur," etc., but then we must remember that to-ur is human.

A cruel but very truthful exchange says: "The bicycle is a graceful arrangement, composed chiefly of two wheels and three cranks, one seated on a little saddle, turns the other two with his feet."

OUR MOTHERS.

In the formation of our character, we owe to our mothers more than any other human agency, for it is their hands that first twine the tendrils of heart, guide our footsteps aright, lead us in the path of virtue, and in the dark dreary night of pain, their watchful vigils keep beside the couch of their dear ones. Whose but the all seeing eye of Jehovah can fathom the depths of anxiety they feel, and who can tell of crowds of prayers which they offer in their behalf for their children?

Their influence is felt in all the modified tight which it lends and purifies the way and impulses of the youthful mind, and guides it onward in its course toward heaven. How, then, can we pay a just tribute to our mothers—with what measures of gratitude and affection shall we requite them for their maternal care.

To those who have lost their mothers in early life, there is the hallowed spot, sacred to memory, where they retrospect the past, recall days and nights when their mothers kept watch over their sinless years, and where they may look forward, with faith and hope, to the blessed reunions of the everlasting future.

Friends may be torn from our hearts, hopes may be blasted, and our love for others may grow cold, yet every principle of gratitude and every feeling of virtuous sensibility requires that we should cling to our mothers and love them still.
