Tobacco From the Seed to the Plug.

The seed is exceedingly small, about like that of the poppy, and grows in pods similar to the mullen. Each stalk has a great number of pods and a half dozen stalks will make seed enough for a large crop. These are sown in beds during January or February, in fresh ground newly burnt off. At first the plants are quite small and tender, but soon gain size and strength for setting out.

TRANSPLANTING.

This is done about the first of May—the ground being first well prepared, fine and clean. The usual distance is three feet. Counting seventy yards square to the acre, each acre will set 4900 plants, or about 5000 as is usually counted. The planter is careful to get an early stand and as even a stand as possible, the importance of which is felt in the cutting and curing.

CULTIVATING, TOPPING AND SUCKERING AND WORMING.

The crop is ploughed two or three times—about like corn, chopped over if necessary after second ploughing, and hilled up carefully as the laying by operation. When the plants commence to put forth blossom shoots, they are carefully topped, leaving 6 or 8 or 10 or 12 leaves below, in proportion to the growth of the plant and the length of time expected to intervene before the coming of frost. Some of the planters practice the rule of leaving as many leaves below the topping as there are weeks to come before the usual time of frost; for instance, plants topped the 1st of August would have ten weeks till the middle of October the usual time for frost, hence ten leaves are left on each stalk. Other plants topped four weeks later would have only six leaves left on each stalk, so that both toppings may ripen as nearly as possible at the same time. Much intelligence is needed in the labor, as many plants are found smaller and weaker and cannot mature so many leaves, hence must be topped lower.

Soon after cutting off the tops, many suckers start out at the joints, which must be kept pulled out by hand, the whole field being gone over several times for this purpose. By this process the plant is prevented from seeding, a much larger growth of leaf is attained, and the nicotine that would have concentrated in the seed is forced into the leaves.

During growth, no animal feeds on it, as it is bitter, sticky, filthy and sickening. It is frequently cultivated without any inclosure.

The tobacco worm, which is about three inches long and green, is an ugly customer and the only enemy of the weed while green, and he very politely and seriously refuses to taste it after being cured. These worms eat it rapidly, soon are grown, then go into the ground and come out next Spring in the large tobacco fly which is ready just in time to deposit eggs on the young plants. The planter is compelled to have these worms picked off carefully several times during the summer.

BARNS.

It is usual to have the barns in the fields, each field having one, two or more barns according to size, and situated at convenient distances, so that the tobacco which is hung when green, may be put into the barns without much hauling.—These are each about 20 feet square and 20 feet high, built of logs and daubed tight, and having five or six sets of joists, one above the other, about 3 feet between. The first set of joists is about 5 or six feet from the ground floor, on which the fires are built in curing. A small door is left in one side. These barns, scattered over the fields, give the tobacco country a cheerful neighborhood appearance.

CUTTING AND HANGING UP.

From the first to the middle of September cutting commences and continues till frost. And here at least 10 or 12 hands are needed in the field at the same time, otherwise the curing will not be even.—Each cutter goes around with a butcher knife, and accompanied by a boy who carries sticks 4 feet long. Each cutter carefully selects the ripest plants, splits down the stalk about two-thirds of the way from the top, cuts it off below the leaves and hangs it on the stick, held ready by the boy. When six or seven stalks are thus hung on the stick it is left down and another held ready. The wagon comes on in the course of half an hour, allowing time for wilting, and loading the sticks on again takes them off at the barn. Continual study is needed here, so as to have each barn of the same grade. Each stick, if the plants are well grown, will make a pound after curing. Crops are generally considered to average one pound for every ten plants, or 500 pounds to the acre. One hand will cultivate some 4 acres. Great care is taken in hanging up the sticks into the barn, as every minutia of the work has much to do with the sale of the article after it is dry. Each barn will hold enough to make 6 or 800 pounds after curing.

CURING.

This is the most difficult and exciting part of the work, from the fact that the weed comes out after four days firing, worth 10 dollars per hundred, if cured only red, or 65 dollars per hundred if cured yellow and bright.

After the tobacco has been hung up about 2 days so as to be wilted to a certain extent necessary, the fires are started under it, at regular distances. Charcoal is used so as to produce heat without smoke, and nine small fires are started and gradually enlarged until the third day, when they are made very hot in order to dry the stalks, and the tapered down the fourth or last day. The burn, the kind of tobacco, the fire, the hanging up, the state of the weather, are all circumstances entering into the success or failure of curing; hence the great difficulty and excitement to the farmer at this stage of the crop. Even after it is dry and yellow, if left in the barn in damp weather, the stalks gather moisture and "run" into the leaves, making them red, and hence worth less in the markets. Additional firing of such damp seasons does not always prevent the deterioration; nor is it always avoided by taking down from the barns and packing in bulk. The state of the weather and the condition of the tobacco are often such as to cause the leaf to sweat or become stemmed, thus lessening its value in market. The planter's success as a planter depends very hugely upon his success in curing.

STRIPPING OFF AND BRINGING.

We now come to strange scenes, where the mind has [illegible]

leaves one by one are taken from the stalks, and separated into three classes, Lugs, Wrappers and Fillers. Two, three or four of the lower leaves are laid on the pile of lugs. Two, three, four or five of the brightest leaves are placed on the pile of wrappers. The other leaves usually the largest proportion, are placed on the pile of fillers. Some farmers go into a nicer distinction and dividing these classes again make the crop into five or six different grades. The leaves are then tied up into small bunches, pressed lightly into large hogsheads and headed up. It is then ready for the warehouse. Samples are kept out from each hogshead, or from each lot of the same grade by which the tobacco is sold and bought. In this condition the manufacturer takes it: but if the factory is on or near the farm, the hogshead is not necessary. Before the existence of railroads, these barrels or hogsheads were frequently conveyed to market by attaching a pair of shafts and a mule, letting the barrel go rolling on the ground behind.

MANUFACTURING—STEMMING.

This is done mostly by women and children when the article is sufficiently damp or in case to prevent its crumbling. Again each leaf must be taken separately and loosing the stem at the small end first, it is quickly pulled out and thrown aside. Then the flavoring is mixed into the bulk. This consists of liquorice, honey, molasses, &c., one or more or none at all. Now the leaf passes into another set of hands, more skilled, known as rollers. The fillers are placed into a roll, and this roll is continually lengthened at one end, and as fast as it is long enough it is cut off from the other end, the usual length of a plug.—These rolls are wrapped on the outside with the bright yellow leaves, known as wrappers, and each roll is almost exactly the same weight, either pound or half pound, as selected for the plugs. These rolls are then placed into iron moulds, all exactly the same length, breadth and thickness. The press brought down with the screw and lever power makes the rolls into plugs of uniform size. The flat plugs are then put into the ordinary tobacco boxes, each having about 100 pounds, or 50 pounds if half boxes. The boxes are now marked with the name of the manufacturer, the location, grade of tobacco, &c. After this the revenue stamp is put on, $32 worth on each hundred pound box.—This must be done, under heavy penalty, before the box can be removed from the factory.

AMOUNT AND VALUE OF CROP.

In 1860, North Carolina produced over 32,000,000 pounds of tobacco, as shown by the census. The crop of 1870 is probably larger. This crop, at an average of 25 cents per pound, would be worth over $8,000,000. The tobacco lands lay in the middle and western portion of the State, including about half the State, Granville, Person, Caswell, Rockingham and Stokes counties, bordering on the Virginia line, are thought to be as fine if not the finest tobacco lands in the United States. Many other counties are probably just as good, but not as yet so well developed.

INTELLIGENCE OF PLANTERS.

Hardly any other crop induces so much intelligence as the cultivation of tobacco; and, hence, planters are generally noted for being men of sound judgment, decision of character, close observers, sharp traders and liberal minded men. All the planters are more or less traders and usually sharp enough to insure success in life. All men who deal in the article long are almost necessarily active, shrewd business men.

OUTRAGES IN SOUTH CAROLINA.

Radical rule is producing a terrible condition of affairs in South Carolina. The Charleston News of the 26th ult., says:

"The Sumter papers come to us containing accounts of new outrages committed by the Radical negroes. They draw no fancy pictures, but tell, as soberly as they can, the plain unvarnished truth. Take the record of one week's work:

1. A white man is dragged from his home by negroes and brutally maimed.

2. A barn is burned down, and on the same night an attempt is made to fire the home place of the owner, which is some distance off.

3. A house occupied by a white family is fired into by negroes, and this is the signal for burning down the barns and stables containing the whole crop of the year.

"These acts of lawlessness show what is the temper of the Radical negroes; while the disposition of the whites is shown by the fact that they have already held two public meetings for the purpose of denouncing the disturbers of the public peace, and for declaring their determination of using their individual and collective efforts against such law and in favor of good order. The negroes burn and ravage every night; the whites, insulted as they have been, still plead for peace."

CURIOUS ADVENTURE OF A MECHANIC.—The Louisiana Savings Bank is building a large vault. Admission to it is gained through large wrought-iron doors, to which are affixed patent locks. These locks were put in order by a locksmith named Tympe. After arranging the fastenings on the door, he lit a candle and proceeded inside the vault to see how they fitted. Closing the door after him the eccentric catch of the lock fell, locking him in. There upon the outside could render him no assistance, since it was a combination lock, and no one knew the numbers at which it was set. In this narrow cell, shut in by the four walls of the vault and the huge iron door, the man felt as if he was buried alive. The only means by which he could obtain air or drink, was through a small hole in the door, not the twentieth of an inch in diameter. The atmosphere of the cell-like place was foul and noisome, and the man felt, as if he would suffocate. Fortunately he had carried with him into the vault a hammer and chisel, and with these, the only implements he had, he proceeded to cut his way out. The work was slow and tedious, and required two hours and a half of incessant labor. He succeeded at last, however, and was taken more dead than alive from his vault. The wonder is that he did not suffocate.—New Orleans Picayune.

Beecher, on Sunday last, launched his curse at Ben Butler. Around his forty he drew the sacred circle of the Plymouth Church, and on his head, we even on his hairless crown he trampled the curse of Beecher, in the following words:

Curse! Curse! Curse! All Souls! Let that man who commands the vast force of war, curses when applied to fight for national existence. The only war we want is the war of righteousness. Let Congress, let statesmen war, but the soldiers of this great Republic should know the [illegible] of army and instead of the word of war let them yet continue to [illegible] the eve of fraternity and [illegible]
