[From the Harrisburg Patriot.]

A NEGRO CANDIDATE.

The Radical list of candidates for State Senator in the first district has been increased by a negro, who longs to distinguish himself in the legislative halls of Pennsylvania. To the names of Morris, Morris, Lyndall, Tittermary, and a dozen of others, must be added that of Octavius V. Cato. If there be anything in a name, and there is certainly nothing in his color, that prevents him from being a Radical candidate, he is just the man for State Senator. Radicals in that body have great need of a statesman of the stern Roman virtues of a Cato. In the resolution presenting Mister Cato, the colored suffragans of the first district intimate that they will no longer be hewers of wood and drawers of water. By this they do not mean that they will cease to chop wood, tote water, dump coal, black boots and do other chores for their white fellow-citizens of Philadelphia. It is a figure of speech by which they convey the hint that they will not be used merely to vote the Radical ticket, but must have their full share of the honors and emoluments of office. This is Congo gratitude towards those who have bestowed the boon of the ballot. The glorious privileges of suffrage conveyed by the fifteenth amendment are contemptuously described in the figurative language of South street as the hewing of wood and drawing of water. The negroes of the First district basely fly in the faces of their white brethren and demand the nomination for State Senator. If this does not fill the heart of every radical patriot within the bounds of that district with disgust we have utterly failed to comprehend the nature of the animal. That the negroes of Philadelphia, to whom the ballot was given that they might swell the party vote, should insist on holding the offices into the bargain is more than the good temper of the politician of the radical persuasion in that city can be expected to bear. But he will soon discover that he must grin and bear it.

In South Carolina and other portions of the reconstructed South the negroes have pretty nigh cussed to hew wood and draw water in the political camp of their allies. A negro Secretary of State, three negro members of Congress, and negroes in numerous other public positions, show their understanding of the 15th amendment in South Carolina. This was not the programme of the carpet-baggers, who expected a fat estate in the offices of that State by means of negro votes. In their disgust at negro ingratitude and white superciliousness many of them are now leaving that country, for that country's good. Candor compels the admission that the blacks who have been elected to office in South Carolina are the superiors of their carpet-bag rivals. For be it from us, however, to institute a comparison between Octavius Vespasianus Cato and his intelligent and distinguished white competitors for the Radical nomination for Senator in the first district of Philadelphia.

The eyes of the country are now fixed on the 1st district. Here is an opportunity for the Radicals of Philadelphia to give a signal test of the sincerity of their convictions. If negroes are good enough for voters, let the Radicals show that they are good enough also to represent Philadelphia in the State Legislature. There should be no wriggling in the Loyal League on Broad street. The members of that political association, clamored loudly for the ratification of the fifteenth amendment in this State. They sent representatives to the capital who violated their official oaths and trampled on the Constitution of the Commonwealth by voting for the ratification. The mutilated Constitution stands to-day with the word white written all over it as a monument of the perfidy and obsequiousness of the representatives of the people of Pennsylvania. But that is past. The revolution has been effected by fraud, but it is none the less a revolution. It has all the virtue and validity of the solemn and deliberate decree of the people.

Let the white Radicals of Philadelphia accept the situation with the best grace. A negro demands, as proof of their sincerity, a seat in the Senate of Pennsylvania under an amendment which was ratified against the will of the people.

HISTORY REPEATING ITSELF—GEORGE III. AND ULYSSES I.

The Washington correspondent of the Baltimore Gazette, speaking of General Grant's employment of the army against the people for the purpose of controlling elections, says:

It is most remarkable the similarity of the conduct of the President of the United States in 1870, and that of King George in 1770—one hundred years ago—and the American people might derive great profit from a perusal of a history of the Boston massacre, and see in the recounts of that event how thoroughly history repeats itself. In view of what has transpired in New York and other States, where the military force has been used to control elections, and the order issued directing a large force to be sent to Georgia to intimidate the people and, if possible, carry the election in favor of the infamous clique now ruling the people of that State, that portion of American history is important and significant.

"Then," says the historian, "the King insisted upon his right to quarter soldiers among the people to compel them to obey the laws," and the supporters of the royal prerogatives used almost the same arguments in defence of King George that the Radical papers now use in defence of the action of the administration in "quartering military among the people," under the pretense of supporting a law of Congress. Such arguments did not satisfy Joseph Warren, Samuel Adams and the people of Boston and Massachusetts, nor of Maryland and Virginia.

They are not satisfactory to the people of the country to-day; and if the Radical leaders persist in following the example of George, the capital in the two cases may be still further imitated. One thing is evident, as it was of the military in Boston, in 1770, against the whole people of the country in opposition to the military and oppressors of Congress, the use of the military, in 1870, in the to elections, and the need to quartering them in other towns, where the civil officers are to be held, for a number of days, is a sign of weakness and fear. We cannot do the political chicanery of the Radical party justice, but we do think the use of the military in Georgia, to carry the election in favor of the Radical party, is a sign of weakness and fear. We cannot do the political chicanery of the Radical party justice, but we do think the use of the military in Georgia, to carry the election in favor of the Radical party, is a sign of weakness and fear.

CARRIER PIGEONS.

Carrier pigeons, it is announced, are now the only means of communication between Paris and Tours, where the seat of government of France has been temporarily established. Since the introduction of the electro-magnetic telegraph the use of carrier pigeons has nearly been discontinued, although this means of conveying secret intelligence is still employed. They have, however, been more used in the Turkish dominion than in any part of the world. The advantages to be derived from carrier pigeons are very limited, as they cannot be dispatched to their homes except under peculiar circumstances. Thus carrier pigeons must be brought from the place to which they are to return within a short period, not exceeding two weeks of their being let loose, and at a time when they have their young in their nests. The bird must also be kept in the dark, and without food for eight or ten hours, before being released. The message is written on very thin paper, and enclosed in an envelope tied around the body and under the wings. Another inconvenience, when the journey is for a long distance, arises from the bird's alighting in quest of water, by which the message may receive injury or be obliterated. In order to alleviate the pangs of thirst it is customary to bathe the pigeon's feet in vinegar, so as to keep them cool. The instinct by which the carrier pigeon is guided has never received a sufficient explanation, as other birds possess equal and even greater powers of vision, but cannot be trained to carry messages. When the carrier is let loose it rises spirally in the air to a great height, and then proceeds to its home at the rate of thirty miles an hour. The carrier pigeon is of a remarkably large size, being fifteen inches in length from the point of the bill to the end of the tail. The naked skin on the bill is very large, and is covered with red fleshy excrescences; the eyes are surrounded with a broad circle of naked red skin, and the wings reach nearly to the extremity of the tail. The carrier pigeons are trained at an early age by being at first taken a few miles from home and let loose. The distance is gradually increased until the birds acquire great facility in carrying messages. An actual postal system, in which pigeons were the messengers, was established by the Sultan Noureddin Mahmoud, who died in 1174. This pigeon mail lasted for over eighty-four years, or until 1258, when it was destroyed by the Moguls, who captured Bagdad.

HOW TO MAKE HOME ATTRACTIVE.

It is practicable to make home so delightful that children shall have no disposition to wander from it or prefer any other place; it is possible to make it so attractive that it shall not only firmly hold its own loved ones, but shall draw others into its cheerful circle. Let the house, all day long, be the scene of pleasant words, kind and affectionate acts; let the table be the happy meeting place of a merry group, and not a dull board where a silent, if not sullen, company of animals come to feed; let the meal be the time when a cheerful laugh is heard and good things are said; let the sitting room, at evening, be the place where a smiling company settle themselves to books or games till the sound of good night kisses are in order; let there be some music in the household, music not kept like silk and satin to show to company, but music in which the father and mother and sister and brother join; let the young companion be well welcomed and made for the time a part of the group, so that daughters shall not deem it necessary to seek the obscurity of back parlors with intimate friends, or to drive father and mother to distant apartments; in a word, let the home be surrounded by an air of cosy and cheerful good-will; then children need not be exhorted to love it; you will not be able to tempt them away from it.

The ties which bind a child to home are created not so much out of great as from little things; some of them I have hinted at, and many more will suggest themselves to a wise parent. There should be a good many holidays in the home. I believe in anniversaries, and I love, by observing them, to connect time with events, and so give to both a deeper interest. The birth-days of a family should be always noticed, and, in some way, celebrated. The busy preparation of the whole household to make some present to father or mother or sister or brother on a birth-day or holiday; the many plannings, the workings in by-corners and at odd times; the bundling of work out of sight as the step of the favored one is heard; the careful stowing of gifts away until the appointed time; and then, when the looked for day has come, the presentations, the confused and merry voices, the filled eye, the choked voice, the heart too full to speak in words, memory touched as with an angel's hand, love that can only be looked its thanks—all these! who can tell their sweet and mighty power? A home familiar to such scenes, will it, can it be one that children shall not love? No, no, even it when the inexorable time comes to go away, daughters shall pass with sobs of sorrow, and sons with pressed lips and swimming eyes, and while mother lives, it will be a home still, home, though years have gone and other homes have claimed them.—Atkinson's Life at Home.

Our friend of the New Braunfels Zeitung has received "an appeal for peace," signed by eleven Yankee officers of a Peace Society, which and whom he handles without gloves. In reply to the advice of the Peace Society to Prussia, he says France had the offer of an armistice recently, but the Radicals of Paris rejected it for fear that they might lose their usurped official positions. They reminded him, he says, of the Radicals of this country, who sometimes refuse to let the people have an election for similar reason. Finally, after giving these Yankee Peace men the cilliolist rod until it is years out on them, he applies the strap, as follows:

"Und indlich manchen wir die barmherzigen Herrn aus den Yankestaate dort draus erinnern, wie Sherdan in dem Shenandoahthale gewirthschaftet, wie er die Scunthe und Lebensmittels, und selbst die Bienenkörbe und Lebensmittels, und selbst die Mutter und Kinder hat, damit kein Getreide gemahlen werden konnte, und wie unsere Gefangenen aus Andersonville sogleich erschossen sind. Wo wir dennoch das selbstid ebenso Herrn und Ihre Crocodile-Thränen?"

That's exactly what we should like to know.

An Illinois woman complained outside by bringing herself to an apple feed. At the second a preacher, holding the end, the appearance of the hundred standing Rev. Dr. Bull was with a bundle, and [illegible]
