NORTH CAROLINIAN.
FAYETTEVILLE, N. C.

From the Raleigh Register.

Geological and Agricultural Survey.

MR EDITOR: Prof. Mitchell says that I have given a false account of the Chatham coal-field. I will not be unfair to Prof. M. I do not pretend that he intends to call in question the accuracy of my details, respecting the outcrop of the coal seams, their dip, strike, thickness, the relations of the strata to each other, or their succession, the fossils, their indication, etc.; but that my assumption, that the coal seams extended three miles within the rim of the coal-field, is false. What I stated in my report of the extent of the seams, is a belief, and that belief is founded upon observation and experience. All our knowledge in mining is founded really upon observation. Veins, carrying metals, are known to extend into the solid rocks 1,900 to 2,000 feet. In England and South America, mines have been worked to a depth of 1,500 to 1,900 feet, and yet not exhausted. Now, money is freely invested in mines, and invested on the belief that they penetrate to great depths. The belief is founded upon what has been and what is. Any person, to be sure, might say of any vein carrying lead or copper, which was exposed only at the surface, that an investment is not warranted, because the vein in question may not extend to a sufficient depth to furnish the amount of material necessary to make it profitable. You can't see how deep it extends, and therefore know nothing about it. In such cases we appeal to experience. What do we find, the world over, with respect to the depth of veins? I answer, that such an uniformity has been observed with respect to them, that we are put in possession of a rule, which, when applied judiciously, or agreeably to known facts, makes investments safe in all cases, or they may be regarded as unsafe in the absence of certain facts. A knowledge of these facts and rules, I might say laws, makes the difference between the opinions of a well-informed geologist and the individual who has no knowledge of the subject.

But, Professor Mitchell is anxious that the people of Fayetteville should not make themselves ridiculous to their neighbors, by building a Railroad to Deep River. Let us see how much danger there is of their being ridiculed in the execution of the project. Suppose, then, a rich company owns 1000 acres, which is underlaid with the present six or seven foot coal seam. The company would possess upon the tract 9,800,000 tons of coal. The calculations which have been made of all the expenses of mining and transportation to New York, leave a nett profit of one dollar per ton. Upon this basis, the company could afford to build the railroad to Fayetteville. Professor Mitchell will not, of course, deny that, in his belief, there is one thousand acres of coal, for he has taught his classes, for many years, the doctrine, that there is a valuable coal-field in Chatham! I will make another supposition. Suppose the coal seams extend twenty miles along the outcrop, and half a mile within the outcrop or edge, which is equal in breadth to the part of the Richmond field, which has been proved by shafts, making ten square miles of coal. In a square mile, there will be 6,272,000 tons of coal; in ten square miles 62,720,000. But the dip of the Richmond seams is much steeper than that of Chatham, and yet coal is obtained by shafts sunk at one half a mile from the outcrop. Can the foregoing supposition convey a falsehood to the Legislature or to a company, of the value of the Chatham coal field? Can the enterprising people of Fayetteville say hereafter that my account of the Chatham coal-field was false, in the face of existing facts? The Richmond coal-field, with all its disadvantages, is worked successfully half a mile from its outcrop, and at the depth of 800 feet; and can the people of Fayetteville be exposed to the hazard of ridicule, by building a Railroad to Chatham, when a thousand acres of coal is sufficient to warrant the building of the road? It would not be unfair, to say, that the enterprise of Fayetteville should make this road. How much the interests of the interior counties demand this! But I will leave other sources of revenue from the calculation; and say it, without fear of ridicule on my part, for sustaining this view, or of being charged with making false representations by the public, or by sensible men,—I say, then, build this road on the merits of the coal-field! Now, by changing the supposition, that the coal-field extends only half a mile within the outcrop, I do not change my views, or my belief, that it extends three. If a company or an individual, however, thinks my belief too great, he may take up with a mile, or a quarter of a mile, in breadth, and twenty miles in length. For the present, either is sufficient to warrant the investment of all the capital which has as yet been thought of. If the Legislature expected of the geologist an exact statement, to a foot, of the amount of coal in the Chatham coal-field, it would have said so, and have also furnished the means for doing it.—What the Legislature expected, and what sensible men expect, is, that I should first acquire the facts which are peculiar to this coal-field, and from these facts express such an opinion of them, and furnish such illustrations of those facts, as I deem proper, or such as will furnish a correct view of the relations of the mass composing the coal-field. It is well to remember, that the Richmond coal-field, which has furnished a coal seam one-half a mile within the outcrop, shows, at that distance, no signs of giving out.

Before I close, I wish to allude once more to Prof. Mitchell's class teachings. He says he has taught for years that there is a valuable coal-field in Chatham and Moore. I wish to know on what that doctrine is based. What does the Professor mean by valuable? There can be no doubt that he means that the coal-fields has a sufficient amount of coal to make it valuable for commercial purposes, and that it is valuable, in the face of all the difficulties and expenses attending its conveyance to market.—How did the Professor arrive at such a conclusion? What facts had he ascertained which would warrant it? It must have been a deliberate opinion, formed in view of certain facts. It appears from his statement that his views really do not differ much in this respect from others. They are not quite so glowing, so full of promise, yet they are still sufficiently so to warrant the heavy expenses of mining and transportation to market, and leave a surplus over and above all these for the remuneration of enterprise; or else he could not have thought the coal-field valuable. Now, how came the Professor to teach his classes the doctrine? for it seems that he held it prior to the visits of Professor Johnson, Mr Williams and others, and, indeed, prior to any important discoveries which have resulted from the sinking of pits and of boring. Now, there is no doubt Prof. Mitchell came to the conclusion, that there is a valuable deposit of coal in Moore and Chatham, from the character of the formation, and that it was formed on grounds independent of what the pick, spade and auger had furnished or disclosed.

Asiatic Cholera.

As our readers are aware the Asiatic Cholera is prevailing extensively not only in Europe, but in Cuba, we, therefore, for the benefit of our friends in that Island, subjoin the following mode of treating the disease communicated to the English press, by Mr E. W. Lane, the well known Eastern Traveller and Orientalist; and would add that in 1849 we ourselves saw a very violent case on shipboard completely cured by the use of precisely the same remedies—indeed we believe that many of our shipmasters for years have used the treatment in such cases successfully, generally, however, adding salt to the other ingredients.

"While residing in Cairo, in 1848, when the cholera was raging there, I was informed that an Englishman in a small neighboring village had effected a speedy and perfect cure in every case of that disease which he had an opportunity of treating. The number of the cases was 62, and many of them were very malignant; and I subsequently learnt that his mode of treatment had been practised with equal success in Spain, Constantinople, and India, and was never followed by typhus or typhoid fever, which proved fatal in many cases when the cholera itself had been subdued by other means. Upon applying to him, I received the following directions, which I practised in a few cases which afterwards occurred in my house and elsewhere, and with invariable success. If the patient have not vomitted the poisonous matter, which is a characteristic of the disease, and which resembles rice water, give a tablespoonful of powdered mustard in a tumbler of cold water, as an emetic. After the vomiting (whether produced by the disease or by the above means,) within a few minutes give a wine glass of brandy with ten grains of powdered capsicum (Cayenne pepper) stirred up in it. This generally produces almost immediate relief, and within an hour rest, perspiration, and sleep. In a few cases it was found necessary to give a half dose of the brandy and capsicum after half an hour or more. A second half-dose was never required, but should it be required, it may be given. No other fluid should be drunk before recovery. To accelerate convalescence, it has been suggested that 15 drops of a mixture of spirit of ammonia and sulphuric ether, in equal parts, may be advantageously given three or four times during the following day. The above quantity of brandy and capsicum is for an adult patient suffering a severe attack; in other cases two-thirds or half of that quantity may suffice, as I have proved by experience."—Charleston Courier.

The Lovers' Fuel.

The Paris correspondent of the Courier Des Etats Unis, furnishes the following vivid picture of life in the gay French Capitol:

A law student fell in love with a young lady, who was an artist of some description, and was affianced to her. He devoted himself with great assiduity to the completion of his studies, that he might obtain a diploma, which would make him honorable in the estimation of the betrothed. In one of their conversations, they got into an argument on some abstruse point of law, ethics, or science, and the discussion finally became so warm that the high-spirited lady, finding it impossible to conquer her antagonist by the force of reasoning, resorted to a more forcible arrangement, and actually boxed her lover's ears. Her hot temper soon cooled, and upon reflection she was so shocked at the outrage she had committed that she insisted upon making some suitable atonement for the unpardonable insult. The student, however, assured her that he was ready to overlook the incident, & proceeded to kiss the hand that had cuffed him. This only aggravated the difficulty in the estimation of the chivalrous young woman, and separated the lovers wider than ever.

She declared she would never consent to marry a man who could receive such an insult as she had been guilty of inflicting upon him, without resenting it or demanding reparation. Finally, however, the love which she still retained for her unfortunate friend suggested a mode of effecting an honorable healing of the breach. She proposed that the matter should be settled by a duel. This being her ultimatum, he reluctantly consented. The preliminaries were adjusted, seconds appointed, and the parties proceeded in a carriage together, to the spot designed for the combat. The lady loaded both pistols herself, the stand was taken, the word given, and the shots exchanged. Both were unharmed, the balls not having grazed either of their persons. Wounded honor, however, was duly healed, and the duellists rushed into each other's arms full of love which was just as good as new.

A Word to the Ladies.

We confess we felt a little—no; not a little, but very deeply mortified, on reading the following advertisement in a Virginia newspaper:

"SCOTCH SNUFF.—A very large stock of above, put up expressly for North Carolina trade and for sale at very low rates."

We felt mortified because the intimation is here made, and, we fear, too truthfully, that the practice of begriming the soft, pouting, red lips of the ladies, which nature seems to have designed expressly for the purpose of kissing and emitting soothing and musical sounds, with nauseous tobacco dust, is peculiarly prevalent in North Carolina.—This is a subject of reproach to the lovely fair ones of our State—a practice in itself indecent, and unhealthy, and one which they should be ashamed to indulge in.—The Irish will hardly ever get clear of the opprobium cast upon them for their blunders—the Dutch for bungling, or the ladies of North Carolina for the nasty practice of dipping snuff. But we hope the latter will make the effort and in the course of years they may succeed.—Warrenton News.
