[illegible] IN PRICE

[illegible] Delicatessen, [illegible] the increasing [illegible] other estimate [illegible] a shortage in [illegible] a survey of the sources of such [illegible]. Oil from the livers of porpoises and blackfish, which is likely used to lubricate the new [illegible], has soared [illegible] porpoises have been taken in nets off Cape Hatteras," [illegible] bulletin from the National [illegible] society. "Today they are [illegible] along the coast of Finmark, the northernmost province of Norway [illegible] along the Atlantic shore near Morehead, North Carolina.

"Porpoises winter off the South Atlantic coast. Schools may be seen almost daily, passing just outside the surf. The largest animals reach a length of seven feet and weigh about 800 pounds.

Porpoise Fishing.

A [illegible] porpoise fishermen are as expert as fishermen who literally live in the codfish fisheries off New England and Newfoundland. Lookouts are stationed on the beach above and below the point where the porpoise fishers await signals. When a school of porpoises is sighted, boats equipped with large seines are launched. The seines are joined, forming a semicircular pen with ones end secured to the beach. The netmen are able to watch the progress of a school of porpoises by the position of the lookout who walks along the beach abreast the school.

"When the animals enter the pen, the other end of the net is rushed ashore. The porpoises lunge at the net and attempt to jump over and dive under the mesh, but fishermen are usually stationed in boats outside the pen to scare the surging animals toward the shore. Near the beach a smaller net is hurriedly swung the main portion of the school which is beached first. Then the remainder of the school is swept in by the larger net.

"Although jaw oil is an important product of porpoise fisheries, the animals also are valuable for their body oil, which is extracted from the blubber by boiling.

Blubber a Delicacy.

"In northern Norway the blubber is eaten by the fisherfolk who consider it superior to many other sea foods. The flesh not consumed is salted for exportation, while the entrails and bones make good fertilizer. For many years the Indians along the Maine coast have supported themselves by capturing porpoises.

"Porpoise meat also is consumed aboard whaling boats. Whalers capture porpoises by harpooning. The blubber not consumed is cut into longitudinal strips 4 to 6 inches wide, then minced and placed in pots to boil. Each animal yields about two gallons of body oil. Porpoise jaw oil is produced by removing the animal's lower jaw and extracting the oil-containing blubber, which is boiled gently. A single jaw contains about a half pint of jaw oil.

"Blackfish jaw oil is of equal merit for lubrication. These fish, which widely range the Atlantic ocean, are usually captured by harpooning."

Rumania to Teach Youth Public Service

Bukharest, Rumania.—The University of Bukharest has been endowed with a new faculty, intended for the benefit of young people who aspire to posts in the Rumanian civil service.

King Carol thinks that the spirit of the Rumanian bureaucracy should be altered to accord with the times and the idea of the new school is to instruct students in their prospective duties toward the nation while they pursue their special studies in the ordinary faculties.

New Rumanian bureaucrats are to be taught to regard themselves as servants and not masters of the public.

Hospital Plans Special Ward for Anxious Dads

Pittsburgh.—A "paternity ward" for anxious fathers awaiting word from the stork will be a feature of the new Allegheny General hospital.

The section will contain a dining room; parlors, where husbands may play cards while awaiting bulletins about the wife and baby; and a special barber shop, to insure a good appearance on the part of the proud parent.

"These men deserve all the attention and consideration we can give them," Percy Stephens, representing the architect, said.

Elderly "Runaway"

A [illegible] described as tall and distinct, [illegible] daughter's home in Bronx, N. Y., and hied himself to Coney Island. There he spent several hours on the roller-coasters, merry-go-rounds and other amusement devices. After a happy but tiring afternoon, he was found wandering on the streets of Brooklyn by [illegible]

Ancient Wheat May Be One of Earliest Waste

The oldest wheat yet found, dating from about [illegible] B. C., has been discovered in an excavation in southern Egypt, it was announced in an [illegible] report of the anthropological survey of India.

It formed part of a two-wheeled cart and is believed to be about 2,000 years earlier than the oldest wheat used in Egypt. The fact is of special significance since the wheel is one of the fundamental inventions of mankind. The discovery of its principle greatly aided the course of history.

On the same site, the report stated, were found the ruins of houses of burnt brick and of a large walled enclosure with a drain which evidently was used as a bath by the ancient people. They also were fine cotton spinners.

Material remains show that they were a narrow-headed group, perhaps distantly related to the Mediterranean peoples of Europe. Approximately 1,000 seals with undecipherable pictographs were found, based upon worship of the great Mother God, with cults resembling those of Babylon and Crete.

Tribute to Fulsomeness of Newspaper "Scribes"

J. P. Morgan, like his famous father, learned that time is money and refused to waste much of it on interviews. On one occasion, however, after an important trip to Europe, he consented to see a reporter in his cabin before the ship docked.

The reporter got on hand, but unfortunately no more than two or three dozen more and the financier fled to his cabin and locked the door behind him. But the reporter was persistent. He wrote out a list of questions and shoved them under the door. Then he sat down and waited.

In due course, the list of questions was shoved out and to the reporter's gratified amazement, all the questions were carefully answered and Mr. Morgan had added certain news which was of even more vital interest to the financial world.

But the real kick of the interview was the line across the bottom.

"Don't tell anyone how you got this; I don't want to get a backache picking up letters from the floor."

Devil Fish Family

Devil fish are huge rays of the family Mantidae, which have a lozenge-shaped disk broader than long, with the head free from the pectoral fins and provided with a pair of anterior processes and the tail long and whip-like. The two genera and six or seven species are confined to warm seas. The best-known species are M. birostris, sometimes called the blanket fish by tropical American pearl fishers, from their belief that it attacks and devours men after enveloping them in its great wing-like pectoral fins, which reach a breadth of 20 feet. It is common in tropical American waters and occurs on both the Atlantic and Pacific coasts of the United States. The name applies to the octopus and allied eight-armed cephalopods.

Meteorites

The origin and composition of meteorites never fail to arouse interest wherever they are shown. The origin, of course, is an unsolved mystery. Many now believe meteorites to be parts of other worlds, which, so long ago that dates cannot be reckoned, met with catastrophe and complete disintegration. Meteorites are of three kinds—stone, stone-iron and iron. They contain iron, nickel, aluminum, carbon, phosphorus, sulphur and many other familiar elements. No strange substance has been discovered in a meteorite, which fact lends strength to the theory that the universe is essentially uniform in its composition.

Parliament of Iceland

The alting, Iceland's parliament, is the oldest in the world. It was formed in 930 by a Norwegian named Ulfljotur, after a careful study of Norway's method of local government. A site for the new body was selected at Thingvellir, or "plain of general assembly," and it was not until 1843 that the alting moved to Reykjavik. The parliament reached its zenith of power between the years of 962 and 1262. In 982 Erik the Red, banished by the alting, discovered Greenland and many Icelanders moved there. It was while en route there that Erik's son, Leifur the Lucky, was driven from his course and reputedly discovered America.

Growing Up

An experimental questionnaire in the Newark (N. J.) schools gave teachers, parents and everyone a jolt. The discovery was made that many children would rather remain babies than grow up, Helen P. Tausig reports in Hygeia Magazine. Children are interested in obtaining the freedom that adults enjoy, but they hate to think of giving up all the love and attention that comes to a baby.

Preparedness

"Mother writes that she will be here tomorrow for a holiday, dear," announced Mrs. Jones one morning.

"Very well," said her husband quietly. Patting his little son on the head, he said: "Tommy, didn't you ask me the other day to buy you an air-gun, a trumpet and a drum?"

"Yes, dad," said Tommy eagerly.

"Well, I shall bring them tonight."—Boston Transcript.

BRIEF BLURBS

The greatest aid to the improvement of morals is age.

Savages are people who have no legal ways of robbing each other.

One trouble with life is that it often kicks you in the pants when you think it should pat you on the back.

Man has choked to death on a piece of beefsteak but you can bet it wasn't in a tea room. —Pathfinder Magazine.

DID YOU KNOW THAT—

A company has been formed for the manufacture of bay rum in Trinidad?

A noiseless window shade roller has been invented that stops and looks automatically?

Nearly 100 motion-picture theaters in Central America are equipped to reproduce sound films?

With a new locking assembly for automobiles all doors are locked at once by pressing a button?

A nondrip shaving brush in which an absorbent spongelike material is used instead of bristles is an English invention?

About 20 per cent of Chosen's 54,582,153 acres is under cultivation, Japanese owning nearly one-half of the tilled land?

British railways have developed a locomotive designed for the non-stop run of 393 miles between London and Edinburgh?

A machine has been invented to take a golf ball from a magazine and place it on a tee when a lever is pressed with a club?

RANDOM THOUGHTS

Maybe one reason why France is losing her tourist trade is because her attitude is brutally franc.

Even dumb persons make good card players because they win with their hands and not with their heads.

With everybody waiting for a rainy day, it's no wonder that the merchants have been praying for rain.

A magazine advertises "a love story which begins in Hollywood and ends in a hospital." That's an old story.

One reason why some young men run around with fast women is because they have to run to keep up with them.

Perhaps H. L. Mencken wasn't completely sold on the idea of marriage after all when he selected the Church of St. Stephen the Martyr for the ceremony.

When you play the clearing house numbers you have one chance out of a thousand of getting the right one, which is a better break than you get from a telephone operator.

ZOOLOGY LESSON

All spiders are short-sighted.

Owls have two pairs of eyelids.

A chastised bather at least a dozen times a day.

Geese are used as watchdogs around houses in the West Indies.

The goldfish is merely a domesticated variety of the Chinese carp.

Rhinoceros herds use the same paths. If your camp is pitched on one you'll find out.

Caged animals age more rapidly in light-colored cages than they do in dark-colored cages.

A gun fired close to the ear of a moth will not cause the slightest tremor in that creature's body.

The male cardinal is the most affectionate of birds. Only death or captivity can separate it from its mate.

HARSH WORDS

I heartily dislike all conversations beginning with:

"Stop me if you've heard this . . ."

"Try this and tell me how you like it . . ."

"I was stymied on the seventh . . ."

"What do you know . . ."

"I read an interesting book the other day . . ."

"I am a believer in the existence of platonic friendships . . ."

"And, I thought we were going to be just friends! . . ."

"The fatigue of all exertion prompts me . . ."

In fact, I dislike all conversation.—Kansas City Times.

Use for Rice Grass

A rice grass that appeared in Essex, England, about 50 years ago, is being used to reclaim land from the ocean also to guard sea walls. It is a reed-like growth that has the peculiar property of collecting mud, thus adding the shore land inch by inch and adding shore land that can be put for pasture or tillage. The grass is being exported to other countries where it will be employed for the same purposes.
