REWARDS AND PUNISHMENTS.

Nature is sometimes recommended as furnishing an example to man of the proper method of dispensing rewards and punishments. Nature is sure, prompt and inexorable. When her laws are violated punishment falls upon the offender, no matter what his rank; when he obeys nature's laws he is rewarded, as by an abundant harvest. But nature is not such a good guide in this matter as might appear from such a general consideration of her system. Her rewards are blindly made and take no account of motives. The child who puts his hand in the fire gets burned and learns not to do so again. But the fire is without discrimination; it burns not only those who carelessly or willfully expose themselves to it, but the innocent who are surrounded by flames not of their own making and even the brave firemen who goes to their rescue. As the rain falls upon the just and upon the unjust, so nature's forces deal impartially with the evil and the good.

The punishment for violations of nature's laws is too inexorable, and the system cannot and should not be followed by man. He must discriminate between those who are willful violators of the law; those who are misled into wrong doing and may be won back to right living, and those whose carelessness or misfortune has rendered them liable to punishment. And man in his experiments with systems of rewards and punishments has found, moreover, that it is not always wise to punish. He has to deal with human nature, which is much more complex than elemental substances. He finds that punishment does not act merely as a warning to apprise one of the danger of repeated violations of law, but that it sometimes irritates and renders stubborn the man upon whom it is visited, and he finds also that it is almost beyond his powers to "make the punishment fit the crime." It is not possible to do without it altogether, but if possible offenders are taken in time they may be kept from doing that which would expose them to punishment.

Rewards for well-doing may, in short, be submitted in part, for evildoing. This is especially true of ordinary conduct where there is no moral offense or crime involved. At one time schools were managed almost exclusively on the system of punishing pupils for the violation of arbitrary laws; to day the few rules that are posted are founded upon obvious reason, and their violations are so infrequent that there is no fixed code of punishment. On the other hand, rewards are frequently offered for good behavior diligence and the like, and the discipline maintained is better than it was under the old system. In the management of children at home the system of rewards for good behavior should not be made so obvious or specifice as to lead the child to set more value on the reward than upon approbation, but rewards should be substituted as far as possible for punishments.

Whether a child is kept from play with his associates as a punishment because he has neglected his lessons, or is rewarded with freedom and indulged in some desire because he has done well, may amount to the same thing in the end, but it is better to give him the idea that he is being rewarded for good conduct than to lead him to the belief that some natural right is being taken from him as punishment for infractions of a rule of conduct to which he cannot see the justice. Children as well as grown people make excuses to and for themselves, and they naturally resent punishment as savoring, at least, of injustice. On the other hand they are grateful for the kindnesses and favors, and it is much better to cultivate their gratitude than their resentment. The child who is habitually restrained and punished may have his disposition spoiled and be rendered more intractable than before.

VITALITY OF THE HISTORICAL LIE.

Baltimore Sun.

Truth crushed to earth may rise again, but a lie, though crushed to earth every evening, rises each succeeding day bright and early, with its constitution unimpaired and just as ready for business as ever. Even a plain, ordinary every day lie has more unblushing audacity than a "bronze statue," but for indistructible vitality and sublime assurance the historical lie is the most magnificent of all the family of falsehood. It is for this reason that some of the New England school histories still teach as sacred truths Whittier's poetical lie about Barbara Fritchie and the absurd story that Jefferson Davis was arrayed in female attire when he was captured after the collapse of the Confederacy. Whittier made an effort to catch and crush his lie, but he was not nimble enough, and it is still circling around in the poetical livery in which he dresed it, accepted by thousands of people as a historical occurrence. In Chattanooga, Tenn., Tuesday, Gen. Henry Harnden, who captured Mr. Davis jumped on the lie about Mr. Davis and the hoopskirts and made an honest and vigorous effort to trample it to death. "It is not true," said he, "that President Davis was in woman's attire when captured. It was a cold morning, about daybreak, when I arrested him, and he had a woman's shawl over his shoulders. The story about hoopskirts is totally false. When I reached the Davis camp the first man I spoke to was the Texas gentleman, now Senator Reagan, who told me that he was the postmaster-general of the Confederate States. President Davis was sitting near by on a log, with a shawl, I presume his wife's, over his shoulders, as it was a cool morning."

General Harnden added: "In Grand Army posts when I attempt to explain it I am sometimes hissed. If the writer of history gets it corrected for future generations I shall feel better.

It is not likely that even the shawl that Mr. Davis wore was his wife's, as General Harnden supposes. Shawls were very generaly worn in the South at the time by gentlemen as more convenient than overcoats, and it is possible that the fashion still prevails in some of the Southern States. It was a fashion not uncommon even in some sections of the North before the war. Mr. Davis, therefore, probably wore his own shawl when he was captured. But what is the use of trying to kill a lie? General Harnden, though a calvary officer and a fast rider, says he has been vainly pursuing this falsehood for years, and although he has pounced upon it for a moment, it is safe to wager that it will jump up again in a short time, escape from his clutches and circulate as gospel truth Great and indestructible is the historical lie!

Well Said.

Charlotte Observer.

A correspondent of the New York Sun, who has been visiting in the South, writes very entertainly and accurately of the people of these States, doing them justice in many particulars in which it has been denied them; and this is one of his reflections: "It is remarkable that Populism, with its doctrines of dependence on a paternal government, should have gained any foothold among this proud and self-reliant population, now the most peculiarly American in the whole Union."

It is not, however, so remarkable as it appears at first blush. Populism is the legitimate offspring of Republicanism. The agricultural class, seeing the fostering care exercised over the manufacturing class by the Republican party, has reached—or a large part of it has—the conclusion that if it is right for the government to "protect" one part of its citizens at the expense of the others it is right for it to protect another; and appreciating the fact that the farmers are a more important class than any other, many of them have put in for what they regard as their equal rights under a government come to be paternal in its character. This is the state of the case as we see it.

HAPPILY ENDED.

The Lawyer's Wife Hears Him in a Breach of Promise Case.

"Gentleman of the jury, look upon the sweet, girlish, guileless face of this innocent victim and then upon the dark features of cunning deviltry in the face of her treacherous woer."

It was just as the eloquent pleader was passing through this soul-trying part of his appeal to the jury in a breach-of-promise case that a lady swept out of the spectators' seats of the courtroom in high state of suppressed excitement. No one at first guessed who it was, but after the attorney had concluded his peroration it was whispered around, and finally he got to know that his wife had curiously enough ventured into Court to see what was going on.

That evening at tea there was a scene at the residence of the attorney, and part of it was loud enough for the servants to catch on.

"How could you dare speak so feelingly of that dreadful, coarse-looking, vicious, low-lived hog!" exclaimed the wife in passionate and hand-wringing promenade up and down the room.

"Why, now, my dear—" began the lawyer husband.

"Don't you dear me. You used all the phrases of praise of the virtues of that coarse thing that you ever used to me—expressions that I held sacred too—" and she burst into a "boo-hoo" that threatened to attract the neighbors, if not the police.

"I believe you are in love with the horrid creature," she hissed in a hoarse contralto between her set teeth.

"Why, don't you know I've got to do the best I can to impress the jury," said he. "If I told them of her ugliness, coarseness, ignorance and low character it wouldn't be very—"

"Then you weren't telling the truth," she cried.

"Well, or—" and here he dropped the subject like a hot poker and looked sullen. Then presently he half moaned out: "I was expecting a greeting with some little happiness in it when I came home this evening. I was mighty lucky to get a verdict of $9,999.99 damages."

"And how much of that does she get?" asked his wife, inclining her head sidewise in a half-doubting, half-expectant manner.

"I will give her the $999.99, and keep the $9,000," said he.

"Oh, isn't that lovely," and to each of the four words she took a skip on each foot alternately, and at "lovely" flung her arms around his neck and covered him with kisses.

A Household Treasure.

D. W. Fuller, of Canajoharie, N. Y., says that he always keeps Dr. King's New Discovery in the house and his family has always found the very best results follow its use; that he would not be without it, if procurable. G. A. Dykeman Druggist, Catskill, says that Dr King's New Discovery is undoubtedly the best Cough remedy; that he has used it in his family for eight years, and it has never failed to do all that is claimed for it, by not try a remedy so long tried and tested. Trial bottles free at Aycocke & Co's. Drug Store. Regular size 50c. and $1.00.

The champion lazy man lives in Polk county. His wife has to pound him with sticks to keep him breathing. Rutherford county claims the stingiest man. When he takes a drink of water from his spring, and if there is any left in the gourd pours it back to prevent its wasting.—Ex.

Specimen Cases.

S. H. Clifford, New Cassel, Wis., was troubled with Neuralgia and Rheumatism, his Stomach was disordered, his Liver was affected to an alarming degree, appetite fell away, and he was terribly reduced in flesh and strength. Three bottles of Electric Bitters cured him.

Edward Shepherd, Harrisburg, Ill., had a running sore on his leg of eight years' standing. Used three bottles of Electric Bitters and seven boxes of Bucklen's Arnica Salve, and his leg is sound and well. John Speaker, Catawba, O., had five large Fever sores on his leg, doctors said he was incurable. One bottle Electric Bitters and one box Bucklen's Arnica Salve cured him entirely. Sold by Aycocke & Co., at their Drug Store.

There are several counties in the great Western States considerably larger than Massachusetts.

Let us Have the Truth.

The Caucasian, commenting on the mortgage law, says:

"But whether the law does or does not do it, is a fraud. It is not justly entitled to publication. It appears among the laws through some shrewd scheming and manipulation—and that this scheming and manipulation was done by some Democrat, after the bill had been tabled in the House, can scarcely be doubted. A Democrat confesses to have drawn the bill at the instance of a Baltimore organization, and says that an ex-judge was connected with it."

The truth will finally come out, and all the newspaper misrepresentation cannot prevent it, for all time. The above statement is a tissue of falsehoods. The law was not drawn by a Democrat, no Democratic lawyer "confesses what is alleged, nor was the "scheming and manipulation" done by a Democrat.

Let us have the truth. A Democrat introduced a bill forbidding preferences in assignments; the Finance Committee, through Hileman, Populist, chairman, amended the bill to forbid all mortgages; the bill was then tabled on motion of a Democrat; the Republican Chief Clerk was caught going to the office of the Enrolling Clerk to have the bill enrolled; he was told that the bill had been tabled by a Democrat, and promised "to go and see about it;" it was enrolled by a Populist Enrolling Clerk; it was certified, "examined and found correct" by Senators Moody and Starbuck, both Republicans, and Representatives Cox (Rep.) of Pitt, Taylor (Pop.) of Cumberland, and Walker (Pop.) of Rockingham. After this certification, the Speaker and Lieutenant-Governor, relying upon the Republicans and Populists, who certified its correctness signed the act.

These are the plain facts, and no amount of noise and falsehood will wipe them out. If a Democrat used money to buy the Republican Chief Clerk or the Populist Enrolling Clerk, let him and the clerks be both exposed and punished. Let no guilty man escape!—News-Observer.

Women and Their Ways.

Women have worn corsets from the earliest times. The mummy of the Egyptian princess who lived 2,000 years before Christ, was discovered in 1872, and round the waist was a contrivance closely resembling the modern corset.

In Albania the men wear petticoats and the women wear trousers. The women do all the work and their husbands attend to the heavy standing around.

A competent authority declares that over a million and a half of the women of this country earn their own living.

There are said to be 536 lady physicians practicing medicine in the cities of the United States.

It is stated by an authority on education that nine-tenths of the world's teachers are women.
