...Devil Take Me!"

...town of the most ...nounced Catholic orthodoxy, relates a South German paper, a priest preached lately against the Old Catholics, and in the course of his address said: "The Old Catholics are so wicked that they will all be cast into the pit; and if what I tell you is not true may the devil take me now on the spot!" Just then he knocked his book off the desk, and an American sitting near with a negro servant told the latter to return the book to the priest, who, perhaps, had never seen one of those sons of Ham in his life. The negro at once obeyed, and as he mounted ... steps, the clergyman repeated his wish that the devil might come and take him if what he had said against the Old Catholics was not true. Although the negro went softly, the preacher heard his footsteps, and, turning round, saw a black object solemnly, steadily and surely approaching him. He looked at him with terror, and believing that he would be the next instant collared by his satanic majesty, he cried out, with trembling voice, "It is, after all, possible that there are some good people among the Old Catholics." Turning then round to see if the object had disappeared, he saw it still steadily approaching. The perspiration burst out on his brow, and full of despair, he called out, "There are even many good people among the Old Catholics!" ... that this would suffice, he ..., but what was his horror ... the object was close ... himself in the ... All Sorts of Men.

There is a great difference in men. Some are true-hearted and unsuspicious as Newfoundland dogs; others are like rat-terriers, always nosing around under the impression that there is something going on they don't exactly understand. Some are noble and generous; others thoroughly mean and contemptible.—Some others are overrun with vanity and egotism. Some are invariably kind and considerate; others go about with their eyes shut, in utter ignorance of the trouble they are giving by their carelessness. Some are slow and steady, and to be depended upon; others are quite brilliant, but unreliable. Some have a taste for details, and attend to all the minutia of a subject, while others care only for great principles, and require a thing to be gigantic before it arrests their attention. Men of genius are always uncomfortable to live with. Absorbed in one subject, they ignore trifles, and trifles make up the comfort or discomfort of life.

Oysters will be the next best thing.

A WOMAN THAT COULD BE DEPENDED ON.

A certain lodge of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows determined to have their lodge room done up clean and nice. It was resolved unanimously that Mrs. K. should be employed to do the job. After the meeting adjourned the Guardian, who knew the inquisitive character of Mrs. K., procured a billy-goat and placed him in a closet that was kept as a reservoir for the secret things.— He then informed the woman of the wishes of the lodge, and requested her to come early the next morning and he would then show her what was and what was not to be done.

Morning came, and with it Madame K., with her broom, brushes, pails, etc., and found the Guardian waiting for her.

"Now, madam," he said, "I will tell you what we want done, and how we came to employ you. The brothers said it was difficult to get anybody to do the job and not be meddling with the secrets in the closet; we have lost the key and cannot find it to lock the door. I assured them that you can be depended on."

"Depended on! I guess I can. My poor dead and gone husband, he belonged to the Free Masons or anti-Masons, I don't know which. He used to tell me all the secrets of the concern, and when he showed me all the marks of the gridiron, made when he was initiated, and told me how they fixed poor Morgan, I never told a living soul to this day. If nobody troubles your closet to find out your secrets till I do, they will lie there till they rot, they will."

"I thought so," said the Guardian, "and I want you to commence in that corner and give the whole room a decent cleaning. Now don't go into that closet," and then left the woman to herself.

No sooner had she heard the sound of his feet on the last step of the stairs than she exclaimed:

"Don't go into that closet! I'll warrant there's a gridiron or some nonsense, just like the anti-Masons, for all the world, I'll be bound. I will take a peep, and no one will be the wiser, as I can keep it to myself."

Suiting the action to the word, she stepped lightly to the forbidden closet, and turned the button, which was no ... billy-goat with a spring to regain his liberty, which came near upsetting her ladyship. Both started for the door, but it was filled with implements for house-cleaning, and all were swept clear from the position down to the bottom of the stairs.

The noise and confusion occasioned by such unceremonious coming down the stairs, drew half the town to witness Mrs. K's efforts to get from under brushes in the street.

Who should be the first at the spot but the rascally door keeper! After releasing the goat, which was a cripple for life, and uplifting the rubbish that bound the good woman to the earth, he anxiously inquired if she had been taking the degrees.

"Taking the degrees! If you call tumbling from the top to the bottom of the stairs with the devil after you taking things by degrees, I have them, and if you frighten folks as you have frightened me, and hurt to boot, I'll warrant they will make as much noise as I did."

"I hope you didn't open the closet, madam?" said the door-keeper.

"Open the closet! Eve ate the apple she was forbidden to eat. If you want a woman to do anything tell her not to do it, and she'll do it certain. I could not stand the temptation. The secret was there. I wanted to know it. I opened the door and out popped that tarnal critter right into my face. I thought the old boy had me, and I broke for the stairs with the critter butting me at every jump. I fell over the tub, and got down stairs, as you found us, all in a heap."

"But, madam," said the door keeper, "you are in possession of the great secret of our Order and must go up to be initiated and sworn, and then go in the regular way."

"Regular way!" exclaimed the woman; "and do you suppose I am going near the tarnal place and ride that ar tarnal critter with a bridle or lady's saddle? No, never! I don't want nothing to do with the man that rides it. I'd look nice perched upon a billy goat, wouldn't I? No, never! I never will go nigh it again, and if I can prevent it no woman shall ever join the Odd Fellows! Why, I'd sooner be a Free Mason, and be broiled on a gridiron as long as the fire could be kept under it, and pulled from garret and cellar, just as was my poor dead husband. And he lived over it, but I never could live over such another ride as that."

In Parson Brownlow's prospectus announcing a reconstruction of the Knoxville Whig, he declares that he "will wage war unceasingly upon the infamous civil rights bill, now before Congress, or any other odious class legislation." He proposes to commence the publication of the Whig as soon as he receives "from three to five thousand subscribers, which he expects to do at an early day."

When is a hen not a hen? When she wants to roost her.

Sitting Up With Her.

She was expecting him on Sunday night; the parlor curtains were down, the old folks notified that it was healthy to go to bed at eight o'clock, and Johnny bribed with a cent to permit himself to be tucked away at sundown. He sneaked up the path, one eye on the dog and the other watching for the "old man," who didn't like him any too well, gave a faint knock at the door, and it was opened, and he was escorted to the parlor. He said he couldn't stay but a minute, though he didn't mean to go home for hours. She wanted to know how his mother was; if his father had returned from New York State; if his brother Bill's rheumatism was any better; and he went over and sat down on the sofa so as not to strain his voice. Then, conversation flagged and he played with his hat, and she nibbled on the sofa tidy. He finally said it was a beautiful evening, and she replied that her father had predicted a snow storm. He said he guessed it wouldn't snow, as the moon was not crooked enough to hang a powder horn on the end, and she said she didn't believe it would either. This mutual understanding seemed to give them both courage, and then he wanted to know if she had seen Bill Jones lately. She hadn't, she said, and she didn't want to. Then they went on talking about the donation visit which was to be given before long to Elder Berry, and he carelessly dropped his right hand on hers—his right hand, while his left arm sneaked along the sofa and got behind her shoulders. She pretended not to notice it, and he looked down at his boots, and wanted to know if she thought mutton tallow rotted out boots faster than lard and lampblack. She couldn't say, but she had an idea that it did. He had just commenced to hook fingers with her, when she discovered that something ailed the lamp; she rose up and turned the light down a half inch, making the room look dim. It took him five minutes to get hold of her fingers again, and she pretended to want to draw her hand away all the time. After a long pause he lowered his ... to a whisper, and said he did... what made folks love each other ... bit her handkerchief and ... her ignorance. Ah, me! We have all been there, and who of us cared a cent when the old clock struck twelve, and we five miles from home? The old man was fast asleep, the watch dog gone visiting, and the handsomest girl in the country didn't see why we need be in a hurry.

Perhaps I shouldn't have written of this, but as I was going by Saunders' the other day, thinking of the night I heard him whisper in her ear at spelling school, that he'd love her shadow as long as he lived, he raised the window and called to her, as she was picking up chips in the road:

"Sue Saunders, come in here and find the b'ar's grease for my heel, or I'll break every bone in your body."

A Jewel Down in Georgia.

The following graphic description of the real jewels of the fair South is given by a paper printed in the State of Georgia: Among the many visitors who came to our city on Saturday last to sell their country produce was a young lady from an adjoining county, who had chickens, eggs and butter for sale. Her beauty was of transcendant excellence. Bright, flashing, intellectual eyes and round face and rosy cheeks, while her calico dress was plain and neatly made, and fitted beautifully. Her rich, black hair flowed in luxuriant richness—Highly educated, she conversed fluently, and deported herself with becoming modesty. She wore no false bustle or purchased complexion; had no top-knot on her head, or false fixings to present, but stood in the majestic beauty of a created intelligence that would not yield to the despotic dictates of frivolous fashion. It has been a long time since we gazed upon such a sight. The young men crowded around her wagon with curiosity in their eyes and admiration in their hearts. The old men wept for joy that there was one who had not bowed to Baal. She sold her country produce, went home, milked the cows, cooked supper for ten farm hands and went to church that night with her sweetheart.

That house is no home which has a grumbling father, a scolding mother, a dissipated son, a lazy daughter, and a bad-tempered child. It may be built of marble, surrounded by garden, park and fountain; carpets, of extravagant costliness may spread its floors; pictures of rarest merit may adorn its walls; its tables may abound with dainties the most luxurious; its every ordering may be complete; bu... won't be a home."

Such was the so... which a well-known Western lawyer expected to soothe the Grangers with on the occasion of meeting them just before an election. It reminded a speaker of the Illinois orator who addressed a rural audience: "Gentlemen," said he, "I am proud to be one of you. My father was a farmer, and I am a farmer born. Yes, I may truly say I was born between two rows of corn." At this juncture a tipsy agriculturist at the further part of the house hiccoughed out: "A (hic) pumpkin, by thunder!"

At the University of Cambridge a worthy and wealthy man, and one likely to be a benefactor to his college in the way of bequests, failed on his examinations seventeen times. The examiners at last made up their minds to pass him if he answered a single question correctly. "Who was the first king of the Jews?" was the question, for which he was quite prepared. "Saul," was the ready response. "Very good, sir; we are quite satisfied with your knowledge of scripture history—you may go." Proud of his success the candidate walked away with a great swagger. When he got to the door of the Senate House he thought he had not told all he knew, and, popping his nose in, shouted, "Yes, sir; Saul—afterward called Paul."
