THE KU-KLUX

How Radical Thunder is Manufactured—The Other Side of a Very Fanciful Picture.

The Northern Radical papers are publishing a picture representing the Ku-klux hanging, or about to hang John Campbell, when he is rescued by Deputy Marshal Hester, who is also a United States detective. Accompanying this picture was an account which professed to state how the valiant Hester succeeded in rescuing Campbell. The Raleigh Sentinel of Saturday in the following comments on the article shows clearly how Ku-klux thunder is manufactured. The Sentinel says:

"There is no truth in the picture or the statements accompanying it.

"We have it from Mr. Alphonzo Haynes, of Watson's photograph gallery, in this city, that Hester, Marion Keith, and E. S. Wallace, of Holden's 'melish,' with Chick Boots, negro, Julius Archer, and four other negroes appeared at his gallery, and the photograph of the group was taken and sent to Washington, and millions of pictures have been copied from it. When the picture is before you, the man on the left is Goodwyn, alias Hester; the man on the extreme right is E. S. Wallace, of Holden's militia. The records of Squire Wesley Whitaker's court, not fifty yards from our office show that Wallace was lately arrested on the charge of larceny. Next to Hester in the picture is Charley Moore, negro, who is No. 2; No. 3, Ed.——(Chick, who is in office pointing out the persons in the picture, says he forgot his other name;) No. 4 is Chick Boots, nigger; No. 5 Julius Archer, nigger; No. 6, Tom Manley, nigger; No. 7 Major Twitty, nigger; No. 8, E. S. Wallace, white; No. 9, Marion Keith, white, and not John Campbell with the rope around his neck.

"The facts are these: In August last, Hester, calling himself 'Goodwin,' and passing off as a tobacco peddler, went to Moore county with a wagon, accompanied by a negro and a white man or two. He camped in the neighborhood of Sally Gilmore's (Ku-kluxed for keeping a bawdy house.) Hester sought out the young men of the neighborhood and told them he was a Ku-klux. That he had killed 'chicken' Stephens, &c. He carried disguises with him, and allied on the young men to name the Republicans they wanted Ku-kluxed, and he would Ku-klux them. No one answered to the call. A son of old Mr. Bryan passing Hester's camp, was stopped by Hester who proposed to swap pistols. Young Bryan charged him $5 to boot. There was no trade, and the boy went home. Hester then engaged a boy in the neighborhood to go to the house of Mr. Bryan and tell his son he would give him $5 to boot between the pistols. After getting permission from his mother to leave home, the boy went to Hester's camp, where he was arrested, guarded by negroes, and brought to this city with five other prisoners. At the depot in this city, Hester, the deputy marshal, dressed up some negroes in Ku-Klux attire, and marched the prisoners in front of the negroes to the marshal's office.

"We saw them march up street. Hester, the deputy marshal in front, with a pistol and cow hide at his side, then the prisoners, Jesse Bryan, R. N. Bryan, D. McIver, Wm. Wicker, John Gaston and Calvin Bryan, and then a crowd of negroes dressed as Ku-Klux, following behind the prisoners. The negroes of the city flocked around to enjoy the sight and gratification of the white men, grinning, jeering and cursing them. The Republican Mayor of the city, was sick and did not know of this disgraceful exhibition for the street until it was all over, said he would have had the parties arrested if he had known it. A Republican Magistrate was called on for a warrant to arrest Hester and his gang, but refused to grant it.

"We republish the letter of Mr. N. R. Bryan, published in the Sentinel at about the time of his son's arrest.

"There is no truth in the picture. It is the picture of these white men and seven negroes. There is no truth in the story accompanying the picture. Hester never prevented Ku-klux from hanging John Campbell. John Campbell is a man of low, base character, living at Shallow Well Meeting House, in Moore county. His own account of being Ku-kluxed, given before Mr. Vest, a United States Commissioner, is this: "I was visited by Ku-klux and warned. They came again, and struck me two or three licks, and said they did it for whipping my wife and selling mean whiskey contrary to law.' This was some twelve or eighteen months ago.

"We hope it is not so, but we learn that Governor Caldwell and Mr. Phillips, with other leading Republicans, knew of this libelous picture being taken and sent to Washington, and they gave it, as they did Kirk's outrages, their silent approval.—This false picture and false story accompanying it will do no harm in North Carolina where it can be corrected. The correction will never reach the North, whose political food is just such stories."

THE SOUTH IN CONVENTION.

The coincident publication, by the Administration papers, with ill-concealed contentment, and by the Democratic organs in silence, of a recent letter of Gen. Wade Hampton, on what may be termed the party relations of the South, compels us to recur to a subject on which our views have already and a long time ago been freely expressed. The correspondence of two gentlemen so distinguished and, within certain circles, so influential as Messrs. Hampton and D. H. Hill, is too impressive to be passed by in silence, and we seek to discuss it in the sincere hope that what we have to say may be listened to, and soon convince even them.—The letter in question is to the general effect that the Southern Democracy should not be represented in the National Convention, but should hold itself in readiness to follow the lead of the North, "giving it all the aid they can." It requires no special sagacity to discover why such counsel should be acceptable to those who are guiding the tactics of Republicanism, especially of that wing which sustains the administration. If they, by hook or crook, by the dexterous use of soldiers here and the discipline of office-holders there, can manage to have every State represented, no matter by whom, black or white, in their convention, and the Democratic Convention be fragmentary, they will have the prestige of "nationality," and the Southern Democrats will be spoken of as saliently standing aloof even from their own friends, with a great chasm between, which, even when the election comes, will not be bridged.—Nor would this be entirely a misrepresentation. Nothing, it seems to us, would more chill the zeal and generous sympathy of the Conservative North than to see those vacant seats and miss the faces of their recondiled brethren. It is not enough for us to be told they will "follow our lead." We need their counsel as to platform; departure, new or old; candidate.—Ours is the theory that, for all purposes of consultation and preliminary action, Southern men are completely rehabilitated and part of the political family as if the broadest amnesty had been proclaimed, and the disqualifying constitutional restrictions had never been enacted. They, or some of them, under the cruel legislation the enemies are trying to perpetuate, may not be able to vote, but they are none the less our friends and brethren on that account. It is not difficult to imagine a great practical result to be attained by their presence and the frank expression of their wishes.

If the South, in the Convention, were, with anything like unity, to express the wish that dead issues should be buried, and an existing state of things accepted—may, more, if, while the judgment of the North was balancing in the choice of candidates, the South were not obtrusively, but earnestly and with genuine accord to ask the nomination of one who had, like a generous soldier, fought and helped to conquer them, or of a statesman whose remote antecedents were far from being in harmony with theirs, but who stands firmly on the great basis of Amnesty and Peace in the broadest sense—if this were to happen, as it easily might, who would doubt that the wish would be listened to and the great co-operation secured by harmonious counsel, and not by mere acquiescence? Yet all this is impracticable if the representative men of the South are absent.

The argument which, at this late day, is urged to convince the Southern Democracy that the policy of absence and reserve is the true one, rests, in our judgment, on a mistake of fact and a palpable fallacy in reasoning. "The Southern Delegates," says General Hampton, "in a National Convention could exercise no influence in shaping the policy, making up the issues, or selecting the candidates for the next contest, without seriously injuring the prospect of a Democratic triumph.—That this would inevitably be the case is proven by the result of the last Democratic Convention, where the very presence of Southerners was used to prejudice the action and to defeat the candidates of our party."

We have tried to show why, in a most probable exigency, the Democratic South can exercise a very great influence, and we utterly reject the postulate that the presence of Southerners—General Hampton himself among others—did any practical harm, or conduced in any degree to the defeat in 1868. That defeat was preordained, as much so as was General McClellan's in 1864, and would have happened no matter who was the candidate and what the platform. It was too soon. The ashes of war excitement were not cold. The delusion about "conquering heroes" had not been dissipated. The mass of the people believed in Grant. Even the South found consolation in the hope, if not the faith, that he to whom their great Chief surrendered would give them as generous terms as he had received. General Lee himself had shared their faith, and had written—the letter is in print "General Grant possesses magnanimity as well as ability!" In 1868 no candidate could have defeated him, and it has always seemed to us that the contrary assumption does great injustice to the leaders of that forlorn hope.—There was needed four years of trouble and disappointment, and these the country has had. But all this as it may, it was certainly not the presence of the South that did the harm, and the precedent has no force.

If, however, this be the view—and it is highly creditable alike to their magnanimity and their modesty—of leaders—pronounced men, such as the parties to this correspondence—there is an alternative to either their presence or the absence of everybody. There is in every Southern State an intermediate class of less prominent, or it may be less obnoxious, men—who are not even disfranchised—who, if they fought in the war, fought as young men, and in subordinate positions.—There may be these, (though this is improbable,) who did not fight at all. Yet these are true to the Conservative cause, and representative thoroughly of local sentiment. Why not send such men as these to the Convention? They will be welcome. They will do away with the desolate, fragmentary aly which obvious must give. They will be there to speak for their section. They will feel they are one with us, and as the roll is called, and each Southern State represented in the Convention to vote for platform and for candidate, its delegates will feel that their communities are in Democratic measurement as they used to be. It will be far more effective than that everything should be taken ad referendum, and instead of the Convention speaking at once and for all, to wait for slow and possibly doubtful ratification.—We earnestly press these considerations on our Southern friends.

Washington Patriot.

A Strange Coincidence.

We published last week an account of a curious swarm of flies which was seen passing over Norristown, Penn., and which we rather regarded as a pretty high-flyer, but on Saturday several reliable ladies and gentlemen of our town saw the same strange swarm, corresponding in every particular to the one alluded to. As far as one could see up they extended, and in width they appeared to be several hundred yards, presenting a most remarkable spectacle. Some of them were caught and examined, and correspond precisely with those we had mentioned. Whence and whither these myriads came and are going, no one knows, or at least if anybody does, he or she has kept that knowledge to him or herself. Can any of our savants explain the phenomenon?—Camden Journal.

At the next general election in Kansas the people will vote on a proposition to build a railroad from Leavenworth to a point of intersection with the Atlantic and Pacific railroad in the Indian Territory.

Chicago papers complain that people "in an ordinary condition" tumble into the street tunnel. Sad indeed.
