One percent's shoplifting troubles Student Stores

by Harry Smith
Staff Writer

"Ninety-nine percent of the students are honest, but one percent are damned expensive," Student Stores manager Tom Shetley says of the shoplifting problem here.

Shetley said all college stores have shoplifting, but "I think we have less of a problem than most. Carolina students seem to be more honest than those at some of the northern and western colleges."

Last year's "rip-offs" from the Student Stores amounted to approximately $10,000, or "enough to provide scholarships for 20 to 25 needy students," Shetley said.

"Some of the college stores are really taking a clobbering. Last year Stanford was ripped off $84,000," he said.

Shetley said one or two shoplifters are caught each week. He said students are turned over to the student judiciary. Non-students are turned over to the police and a warrant is signed for their arrest, according to Shetley.

In explaining security precautions taken at the Student Stores, Shetley said, "There is a peculiar situation in every college store: The more obvious the security, the worse the problem."

"Elaborate security precautions seem to be a type of challenge to some people. Our cameras, which are monitored, may be a deterrant. But I don't think our problem warrants more elaborate equipment."

Shetley said the store's employees are asked to be observant and watch for shoplifters. He said shoulder bags present a particular problem to the store, but he wouldn't want to ban them. "That would be a last resort."

He said the Student Stores employs no special security personnel, although during rush periods some of the store's regular employes watch from the stairway.

Shetley termed the bad check situation "much better" this year. He said after a bank returns a check for the second time, a notice is sent to the offending student by regular mail.

If the student fails to contact the store, a second notice is sent by registered mail. If the student fails to contact the store within 24 hours after receiving the second notice, a warrant is issued for his arrest.

Shetley said profits from the store last year provided $45,000 in athletic grants-in-aid and $165,000 to financially distressed students. In addition, $20,000 was awarded for fellowships.

Smith concerned about tuition hike

by Gerry Cohen
Special to the DTH

Chapel Hill state representative Carl Smith's main concern about the out-of-state tuition hike was that it "came so suddenly for the students."

In an interview Sunday, Smith said he voted for the House version of the bill, which would have raised tuition to $1,800 immediately. The bill was amended in the Senate to postpone half of the rise for one year.

The Orange County Democrat said he would neither introduce nor support any measure to repeal or delay the out-of-state hike during the Oct. 28 special session of the General Assembly.

"Most of the people in this state are tired of subsidizing out-of-state students," Smith added.

"People can't understand why they should pay a New Yorker to come to UNC."

Smith said the legislature could have avoided the sudden hike by beginning the increases earlier, perhaps two years ago. "It was unfair," he noted.

"No one in the General Assembly was willing to vote for a tax increase this session," Smith said, "and when the tuition hike was proposed, legislators literally leaped for a chance to allocate the $26 million (later $13 million) in revenues. "We were able to keep the money for the University, though."

Smith said he did not consider the tuition hike a tax raise.

The freshman legislator discounted reports he would run for the state senate in the May 2 primary. Smith said it was important to have someone with seniority in the House. He said he would make a final decision on a senate bid after consulting with county party leaders in his senate district.

Smith said registration of students in Orange County would probably not have much of an effect on his legislative race. "Republicans seem to think students will register Republican, while the Democrats have an opposite view," he said.

Smith said student political involvement is a healthy trend.

Smith was chairman of the Orange County Commissioners before winning election to the General Assembly in 1970.

Black joins Yack staff

by Charles Jeffries
Staff Writer

While many blacks burned their yearbooks in The Pit last week due to their exclusion from its photo essay section, one black student decided to join the staff.

She is Annette Morgan, 18, a freshman from Winston Salem.

"I volunteered to join the Yack staff because journalism is part of me...at least yearbook-type activities," said Miss Morgan, who worked as editor of her highschool yearbook.

In response to the burning last week of approximately 55 yearbooks, Miss Morgan said, "If I had had one, I would have burned mine too."

Miss Morgan noted that she volunteered for the Yack staff before the controversy over the exclusion of blacks became an issue.

"I hope to talk with other black students and convince them to try to help me in preventing the same thing from happening again next year. I would also like to talk with those black leaders of organizations and have them express their opinion of what the yearbook should reflect about black people on campus," she added.

Dave Collins, this year's Yack editor, said he welcomed Miss Morgan's interest in the yearbook. He hoped other blacks would also volunteer.

Miss Morgan was quick to point out that she believed her possible selection to the staff would be a token effort on the part of the editor, but "I will at least have the satisfaction of trying," she said.

Collins said if anyone else was interested in helping to publish this year's Yack, they should attend a meeting at 7:30 p.m. Thursday in room 202 of the Student Union.
