TERRIBLE SCENE ON SHIPBOARD.

The danger of shipping combustibles on board passenger ships was strikingly illustrated in English waters a fortnight ago.—A passenger named Henry Parsons tells the story in a letter to the London Herald. He says he started from London for Cornwall on an excursion, accompanied by his wife and two children. Preferring to go by sea, he took passage on the steamer Lady Wodehouse; land, when under way, that the cargo consisted of paraffine, petroleum, pure spirits of camphor, linseed oil, lucifer matches and gunpowder. Going to sea in a volcano was not pleasant. Nevertheless he went to bed, only to be aroused by a cry of fire. Then came scenes which are vividly described:

I tumbled out of the berth and sung out to know what was the matter, when the stewardess replied, "Oh, sir, the paraffine has caught fire!" and then the appalling fact flashed across my mind that the barrels I had noticed, which were within six feet of me, were charged with this dreadful combustible. I got my boys and their clothes out, and their mother, having come over to us, took them back with her into the ladies' cabin, and I set to work to get our luggage out, as I expected the fire to enter every moment. While thus engaged I heard the fire roaring like a furnace, and the thick plate glass became red hot, glowing with the intensity of the fire.—Nothing could have saved us had it not been, under Providence, for the coolness, courage, and skill of Captain Higginson, and the undaunted gallantry of his crew, aided by some of the passengers, among whom I noticed men of the artillery, marines, and 50th regiment, besides sailor passengers.

It appears that during the plunging and rolling of the ship a cask of paraffine broke adrift, and pitching on deck started its hoops and began to leak; this was followed by another, which more ambitious, took a "header" into a case of matches. The matches, resenting the assault, immediately broke into flame and ignited the paraffine, which caused the barrel to burst, and in an instant the deck was a sheet of fire. The captain with great promptness and skill, availed himself of the raging storm to ship a heavy sea, which checked the blaze and washed much of the paraffine overboard, and enabled the hands to rig the hose and handle the buckets, which they did with a will; they stood in the blazing gang way, and heaved the casks of paraffine overboard all in flames, while others dashed buckets of water over the burning woodwork of the saloon, the bulwarks, and a boat hanging on the davits overhead. After about an hour of desperate work and intense horror the fire was extinguished, and we had the pleasure of assuring the womankind that all danger from fire was over.

I do not know how others felt, but for my own part I have never experienced anything like it. I have been in many dangers both by sea and land, have doubled the Cape and weathered the Horn in the wildest weather, but never did a fearful death so stare me in the face, and when I thought that my wife and two bright boys were doomed to perish before my eyes in the same manner, and I thought of three little innocents at home thus bereft of father and mother, my feelings can be better imagined than described. Immediately after all danger was over I was seized with violent sickness, not sea sickness, but something quite different. About an hour and a half after another case of lucifers burst into flame, and I saw a man trying to force it through the entry-port or gangway; it was too large, and burst in his arms, hundreds of blazing boxes being whirled by the gale around us as we stood on the saloon deck. The effect was terrific.

All through this dreadful time the ship tore at full speed into the dark night, and faced the tremendous seas, and being steered from amidships on the saloon deck, the man at the wheel stood at his post unmoved, although at times the sheet of flame made an arch of fire over his head and seemed to threaten to blind him.

[From the St. Louis Times, Sept. 21.]

SINGULAR DIVORCE—A HUSBAND PAYS HIS WIFE $2,000 TO DESERT HIM.

It will be recollected by the readers of the Times that a week ago Philip Headorfer was arrested on the complaint of his wife who charged him with committing perjury in his testimony before the Circuit Court, for the purpose of procuring a divorce. It appears that about a year ago Headorfer and his wife, finding that in their domestic affairs they could only agree in disagreeing, decided to separate on the following terms:

She was to receive a cash payment of $1,000 and leave the city, and one year after the date of her withdrawal was to be paid an additional $1,000, and in the meantime he was to secure a divorce on the ground of desertion. She left the city and took up her abode in Cincinnati. Headorfer applied for and established a divorce without any resistance. A week ago, the year having expired, she returned to the city for the purpose of collecting her little deposit, and instead of calling upon her former husband she visited some friends, who persuaded her to institute suit.

She consented, supposing a civil action had been commenced for the recovery of the money and when she learned that an arrest had been made she refused to prosecute. She says that her husband was not guilty of any criminal influence whatever, and that the divorce was obtained with her knowledge and consent. When she called upon him he consented to her receiving the $1,000, and it was accordingly paid over, when she refused to follow up the suit, and the case was accordingly dismissed yesterday for want of prosecution.—In possession of the money, Mrs. Henrietta Headorfer left the city, and promised to give her former husband no further trouble.

This case is very much unlike many others in the courts, and particularly unlike those where two men have sued for damages on account of losing their wives. Headorfer, on the contrary, actually paid a large sum to assist his spouse to "divorce" him, which, according to the laws of this State, furnishes a valid ground for divorce.

The students of the University of Michigan have determined to have female lecturers this season, and have invited Anna Dickinson, Mrs. Stanton, Miss Field, and G. P. Train.
