SOLSVILLE MIRACLE.

RESTORATION OF PHILANDER HYDE FROM PARALYSIS.

Helpless and Bed-Ridden—His Recovery From This Pitiable Condition—A Remarkable Narrative.

[From the Syracuse Standard.]

During the past few months there have appeared in the columns of the Standard the particulars of a number of cures so remarkable as to justify the term miraculous. These cases were investigated and vouched for by the Albany Journal, the Detroit News, Albany Express and other papers whose reputation is a guarantee that the facts were as stated. Different schools of medicine and some of the brightest lights in the profession had treated these cases unsuccessfully, and their recovery later on, therefore, and its means, have created a profound sensation throughout the country.

The Standard has published the above accounts for what they were worth, and are happily able to supplement same to-day by an equally striking case near home. The case is one in Madison County, at Solsville, and the subject is Mr. Philander Hyde, who told the reporter the following:

"I will be 79 in September. I was born in Brookfield, Madison County, where all my life was spent until recently, when, becoming helpless, I came to live with my daughter here. My life occupation has been that of a farmer. I was always well and rugged until two years ago last winter, when I had the grip. When it left me I had a sensation of numbness in my legs which gradually grew to be stiff at the joints and very painful. I felt the stiffness in my feet first, and the pain and the stiffness extended to my knees and to my hip joints, and to the bowels and stomach, and prevented digestion. To move the bowels I was compelled to take great quantities of castor oil.

"While I was in this condition, cold feelings would begin in my feet and streak up my legs to my back and would follow the whole length of my back bone. I could not sleep. I had no appetite, I became helpless. While in this condition I was treated by a number of prominent physicians. They did me no good. I soon became perfectly helpless and lost all power of motion even in my bed."

The physicians consulted pronounced father's case creeping paralysis," said Mr. and Mrs. Johnson. "And when we brought him home he had to be carried all the way in a bed. The doctors said they could only relieve the pain, and for the purpose he took a pint of whisky a day for three months, and morphine in great quantities. When he began taking Pink Pills we stopped giving him morphine or any other medicine, and cut off all stimulants. In ten days after father began taking the pills, he could get out of bed and walk without assistance, and has continued to improve until now he walks about the house and the streets by the aid of a cane."

"Yes," said Mr. Hyde, "and the pain has gone out of my back and the numbness out of my legs. I have no more chills, my digestion is good and I have an excellent appetite." And then, after a pause, "But, ah, me, I am an old man. I have seen my best days, and cannot hope to recover my old vigor as a younger man might, but I am so thankful that I have the use of my limbs and to be relieved of those dreadful pains."

Others in this vicinity are taking Pink Pills, notably the mother of Abel Curtis, who is using them with satisfactory effect for rheumatism, and Mrs. Lippitt, wife of ex-Senator Lippitt, is using them with much benefit for nervous debility.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills contain, in a condensed form, all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood, and restore shattered nerves. They are an unfailing specific for such diseases as locomotor ataxia, partial paralysis, St. Vitus' dance, sciatica, neuralgia, rheumatism, nervous headache, the after effects of la grippe, palpitation of the heart, pale and sallow complexions, all forms of weakness either in male or female, and all diseases resulting from vitiated humors in the blood, such as scrofula, chronic erysipelas, etc. They are also a specific for troubles peculiar to females, such as suppressions, irregularities and all forms of weakness. In men they effect a radical cure in all cases arising from mental worry, overwork or excesses of whatever nature.

These Pills are manufactured by the Dr. Williams Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y., and are sold only in boxes bearing the firm's trade mark and wrapper at 50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50, and are never sold in bulk or by the dozen or hundred.

FARM AND GARDEN.

HAY CAPS.

As there is never time to make hay caps when the hay is making, they should be got ready now while there is time. They are made of squares torn from fifty-four-inch wide heavy brown sheeting, and should be hemmed with the corners turned back, leaving a place in which to put the tying cords. These may be left long enough to reach the ground, where they may be fastened to a short stake stuck in the earth. Or a loop may be made at each corner, by which the caps may be held fast against a storm and the wind by a peg stuck into the hay. These caps will shed the rain better and will last much longer if they are soaked in a solution of sugar of lead first and then in one of alum, or they may be steeped in a decoction of oak bark for the same purpose. When out of use, they should be well dried and put away in a dry, airy place. Then they will last a life time.—[New York Times.

KEEPING CELERY.

By proper management celery may be kept during the entire winter season, and its fresh, crisp appearance on the table in midwinter has a stimulating effect upon the appetite. Different methods of preserving celery during the winter are resorted to. Some people bury it entirely in sand, while others simply stand the bunches on end, packing them closely together. Neither of these methods is proper, as the roots should be kept moist while the top should be free from earth and dry.

A better way is to take a box and place in the bottom of it a shallow layer of sand or earth. Just above this put a layer of earth and in the side of the box bore a number of holes. Set the bunches of celery with their roots well bedded in the soil, which can be kept moist by injecting water through the holes in the side of the box. Celery can thus be kept in perfect condition throughout the winter, and no farmhouse need be without a supply of it throughout the season.—Chicago Times.

A GOOD APPETITE.

One important item in the management of both growing pigs and fattening hogs is to keep up a good appetite, and one of the advantages in allowing them to run out is that the variety of food that they will pick up will aid materially in keeping them thrifty, healthy and with a good appetite.

In nearly all cases a variety can be supplied with less trouble in this way than in any other. When closely confined, generally hogs are not given as much variety as is really necessary to maintain the best health. Of course in stormy weather there is not much opportunity to pick up a variety to eat, but during the greater part of the season, if allowed to run out, they will pick up more or less that will add to the variety, and after grass starts a better growth at a much less cost may be secured if the pigs are allowed to have the range of a good pasture. For a short period, a rather better gain in fattening hogs for market may be secured by confining in close quarters, but it is usually done at an increased risk of loss, in [illegible] the better health and appetite secured the more profitable plan is to let run out.

[illegible] for growth or to fatten, it is better to let the animal go a little hungry than to overfeed, so have them leave feed from one meal to another. They will gain faster if they come to their meals with a good appetite than so dosed that they eat what is given them with little or no relish.—Farm, Field and Fireside.

[illegible] SANTA [illegible].

[illegible] white pine will grow [illegible] rapidly on the poorest kind of sandy soil, provided the young trees receive a little rich earth about the roots at the time of planting. The Austrian and other species of the pine may be mixed in, and also some of the spruces, if desirable, to make a pleasing variety, but the larger part should be white pine, as this is one of the handsomest of our native evergreen trees, as well as one of the most valuable for its timber. We would advise planting the trees early in the spring, and if possible, get those that have been raised in the nursery and transplanted once or twice since they were removed from the seed bed. Unless you are in a great hurry to get tall trees, do not plant those that are more than two or three feet high, but the broader and more stocky the better. When planting put two or three shovelfuls of good, rich soils but no fresh manure about their roots. If you can afford it plant the trees rather thickly or from six to eight feet apart, and then thin out when they begin to crowd, otherwise set them twelve to fifteen feet apart, and scattered about, not in straight rows. We have in mind a plantation of this kind set out some fifteen years ago, which is now an ornament to the farm and neighborhood, as the trees are twenty to thirty feet high and growing on very poor, sandy soil. If you prefer deciduous trees, plant the American chestnut, as it thrives on light soils if it gets a little good stable manure to aid in a start for life. You might try some of the harder varieties of the European chestnuts, the nuts of which will command a better price in our markets than the smaller native varieties.—[New York Sun.

CATTLE FOR FATTENING.

An experienced breeder gives the following description of the animals he selects to fatten:

"The nose should be broad, that the mouth may close upon a goodly quantity of grass at each bite, and thus save the time of the animal, for even in the work of eating time is money. Quickly filled, the steer is most of his time resting quietly, converting his food into tender, juicy flesh. The head should be short and broad, giving an ample breadth between the eyes. Long, deer-like faces belong to the milk-producers. The head should be held well up and the carriage be assured. The horn should be fine and short, and the eye should be bright and full. The neck should be short and thick; a thick, clumsy neck may be good enough for a hog, but is out of place in a steer. The brisket should come down deep and full, and there should be great width between the fore legs to give ample room for the lungs. Back of the shoulders the sides should be full, the ribs [illegible] well out, and the back [illegible] straight and smooth, with no sinking between the [illegible] and the rump. The hips should be straight, and the flanks well filled and come down low. The hide should be soft and velvety, of thick and covered with a good coat of hair, so much the better as it will help to keep the animal heat and withstand the cold weather. The thigh should be full and the hind legs straight. All the legs should be short and the steer stand squarely on them, add a broad loin and rump and a fine tail and you have a steer which will [illegible] on fat readily and in a short time become a source of pleasure and profit to his owner."

In selecting steers for improving a beef herd these same points should be observed, for as like produces like, a judicious selection of the sire will give just the animals that feeders and butchers are constantly looking for and finding so difficult to secure.

FARM AND GARDEN NOTES.

Never allow a horse to stand under a [illegible].

Care should be taken that the [illegible] and [illegible] can stand upon them without discomfort.

Glanders is on the increase in this country, and it is suggested that owners be careful where and how their horses drink.

Skim milk is excellent for developing growing colts. It often at the right time, it will often settle the question of profit or loss with the horse.

If the cows are about to come in be sure they have a warm, comfortable place. They will be better off and the calf will not get chilled and thereby stunted.

If there were better dairymen there would be less delusion and disappointment in dairying. The man and the cow must both be "good" to make dairying pay.

Did it ever occur to you that the man who will not properly bed his cows is the last one to brush off the filth that may get on the udder from such neglect?

Cold weather ought not to make a cow's teats feel clammy and bloodless if she is kept in a comfortable stable, any more than it should make a man's hands proverbially cold who wears warm woolen mittens.

The cow and hog are so intimately connected on well arranged dairy farms that provisions made for the best results from the cow go a considerable way in providing for the most profitable development of the hog.

FOR THE HOUSEWIFE.

NUTRITIOUS SOUP.

A delicate and nutritious soup is made from white potatoes. Peel a quart of them and boil them in four quarts of water, until tender. Drain off the water, mash fine and season with salt, pepper and butter. Add to the potatoes either two medium-sized onions, minced fine, or a bunch of celery prepared in the same way. Put the mixture in the water in which the potatoes were boiled, and cook a quarter of an hour. Set on the back part of the stove and stir in quickly two fresh eggs well beaten and mixed with a cupful of sweet cream. Let the soup heat through, but not boil again before serving.—Detroit Free Press.

VEGETABLE BILLS OF FARE.

Here are some combinations of vegetables appropriate to serve with roast turkey or chicken:

Plain boiled potatoes, squash, cauliflower with white sauce.

Potato balls or cakes, with parsley butter, scalloped tomatoes, [illegible].

Plain boiled potatoes, scalloped sweet potatoes, mashed turnips, French peas.

Casserole of potatoes, dried [illegible] Lima beans in white sauce.

Stewed celery with cream, [illegible] potatoes, squash.

Plain boiled potatoes, squash, cauliflower with white sauce.

Potatoes, boiled onions in [illegible] sauce, glazed sweet potatoes.

Macedoine of vegetables, potato croquettes, macaroni with brown sauce.—[Farm, Field and Fireside.

STUFFED SPANISH ONIONS.

Take three large onions and remove the skins carefully; then cut a piece rather larger than a silver half dollar from the root end and put aside for a lid. Take out all the centre, with the exception of three or four outer coats, taking care not to make a hole in the bottom. Then chop a half pound of cold meat (any kind), mix with it a [illegible] of bread crumbs, a teaspoonful of minced herbs, pepper and salt to taste and a little milk or water to moisten it. Fill the onions with the stuffing and put on the lids, place in a stewpan, pour over them a little stock made from the bone, or gravy which may be left from the roast. Cover closely and stew for an hour. Serve on a hot dish with the gravy, thickened in the usual way, poured around and garnish with sippets of dry toast. This dish is equally good baked, but if cooked in this latter way the onions must be well basted. The centres of the onions sliced in vinegar, with a dash of pepper and salt, make a very nice salad.—New York Telegram.

The motor increases the present rate of firing 1,200 shots a minute, to more than 3,000 shots a minute.

THE SAUSAGE,

One of the Daintiest and Most Delicious Forms.

Breakfast sausage as it commonly appears in our markets is a very coarse article, and has well earned its reputation for doubtful ingredients. Even where the meat used is without doubt pork, the poorest cuts and pieces, which would not be considered fit for any other purpose, are ground into sausages. It is a common thing for butchers with an eye to economy to use up their tainted pork in this way. There are certain farms, it is true, which furnish sausages that are without suspicion; but the price charged is about double what the sausages would cost when made at home. It is more trouble, if there is a good meat-chopper in the house, to make them at home than it is to make croquettes or hash. The meat-chopper, moreover, is a very useful utensil for other purposes—chopping croquettes and meat for salads and hashes; and it is especially valuable for chopping raw meats for soups. These ought to be chopped in order to extract the full value of the juices. Such a meat-chopper for family use will cost about $2.50. A week's supply of sausage meat can be easily made at once. When properly packed in a board-mouthed jar, with a layer of lard on top, it will keep perfectly in a cold place; but it should be made as often as once a week to be in perfection.

A simple rule for sausage meat calls for seven and a half pounds of lean pork, or sometimes, "for a change," half lean veal; two and a half pounds of fat pork, three ounces of salt, half an ounce of summer savory, three quarters of an ounce of sage, and an ounce of ground pepper. Chop the meat thoroughly, add the seasoning, mix in with the hands, and chop again. Sausage meat like this is much better than when it is packed in little cases, as it usually is in the butchers' shops.

The ordinary way of frying sausages is not the best way of cooking them. A far better one is to put them in the oven in an ordinary baking tin, turning them from one side to another until they are brown on both sides. In a hot oven they will cook in this way in ten or fifteen minutes. If they are in cases they should be pricked thoroughly to prevent them from bursting under the heat. When sausage meat is used cut it into squares or form it into round cakes, about three-quarters of an inch thick, and let it cook in the same way. The French use the richest Spanish and Madeira sauces with sausages. A little chopped onion, in the proportion of a tablespoonful to a pound of sausage meat, may be browned and sprinkled over the sausages just before they are put in the oven. If the sausages are then served with a rich, brown sauce and a sprinkling of minced parsley for a garnish, they will be a very delicate dish for breakfast.

Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. ENGLISH MANNERS.

Shy and Brusque in the Entertainment of Guests.

English people have two prominent characteristics: Shyness in society and a brusqueness in conversation and the entertainment of guests. As an American who had spent some time in England said:

"It is rather disappointing to come over here prepared to bow down and worship, and to find you have to pay a duchess at her ease. I asked an Englishman once whether or not people shook hands when they were presented in England. I told him we did not do so at home, but that English people seemed to have no fixed rule about it, and I wanted to know what was expected of one. 'Well, you know,' he said, with the most charming naivete, 'it isn't a matter of rule exactly; one is generally so embarrassed when being introduced that one really doesn't know whether one is shaking hands or not.'"

The same writer continues: "It never occurs to the Englishman that his manners are too brusque. If you say, on mounting a coach, 'I am afraid I am one too many, I fear I am crowding you all,' you can count upon their all answering, with perfect cheerfulness, 'Yes, you are, but we didn't know you were coming, and there is no help for it,' and it never occurs to them that that is not perhaps the best way of putting it. After a bit you find out that they do not mean to be rude or you learn to be rude yourself, and then you get on famously. I have had Americans come into my rooms in London with tears of indignation in their eyes, and tell of the way they had been, as they supposed, snubbed and insulted and neglected. 'Why,' they would ask, 'did they invite me to their house if they meant to treat me like that? I didn't ask them to. I didn't force myself on them. I only wanted a word now and then, just to make me feel I was a human being. If they had only asked me, "When are you going away?" it would have been something; but to leave me standing around in corners, and to go through whole dinners without as much as a word, without introducing me to any one or recognizing my existence. Why did they ask me if they only meant to insult me when they got me there? Is that English hospitality?' And the next day I would meet the people with whom he had been staying, and they would say, 'We have had such a nice compatriot of yours with us, such a well-informed young man; I hope he will stop with us for the shooting.' As far as they knew they had done all that civility required, all they would have given their neighbors, or have expected from their own people."
