GIANTS HAVE EDGE IN OUTFIELDING

Outfield of Giants is One of Most Efficient Combinations of Gardeners in the Game.

New York, Sept. 18.—Kauff, Burns and Robertson, or Liebold, Felsch and Jackson form a trio of outfielders that would tickle the heart of most any big league manager. There are few combinations in th big show that equal or even approach the efficiency of these gardeners who will defend the outfield walks during the world's series.

Kauff's hitting, Burns' clever fielding, combined with his hitting and Davey Robertson's slugging give the Giants the predominance in outfielding. If Joe Jackson was at the height of hitting he once enjoyed the comparison would reach a different result. However, he isn't, and the chances are he will show no unusual amount of hammering in the coming big games.

George Burns is one of the game's greatest outfielders. If there is a man in the National league who compares favorably with Ty Cobb, Tris Speaker and the clever other outfielders in the American league it is the Giants' star fielder.

Burns, besides being a 300 hitter and a fielder over whom it is almost impossible to drive a hit, is the steadiest player in the National league. Seldom does he see a slump. His work reaches a certain point each year and stays there. He is a remarkably fast thinker. Rival National leaguers will attest to the numerous plays that he has victimized them with.

Benny Kauff reached the National league, proclaimed as a man who would rival Ty Cobb. Benny didnt claim it himself, although he was generally credited with having done so. Bad press agenting got him a lot of publicity that hurt him dreadfully his first year with the Giants. Gradually he has shaken this off until he stands now as a real National league star, made in the National league by McGraw methods. Benny's hitting, always dangerous, is even more so now, for he has learned to wait for the good balls. His hitting will be the predominant factor in the Giant's world's series playing unless he follows in the footsteps of so many great players and turns out a world's series flivver.

Benny and Happy Felsch form an excellent match. Each hits for about the same average, but Felsch is far the better fielder and possesses more baseball brains. It will be interesting to watch the performances of these rivals.

Dave Robertson has been called by John J. McGraw the greatest outfielder in the game if he cared to put enough energy into it. But Dave has failed to live up to this statement. A marvelous fielder and a hard hitter, always dangerous, he hardly measures up to the ability of Joe Jackson, although Robertson is a much better fielder.

Nemo Lieboldt and John Collins are alternated in left or right field for the White Sox, with a possibility that Murphy might take up the patrol. Lieboldt is a much better fielder and hitter, with far more baseball sense than Collins that critics are often led to wonder why he isn't made a regular, to leave Collins for utility duty. It is probable he will get the bulk of the world's series duty.

Lieboldt does not measure up to Burns as a hitter nor in general usefulness, but is his equal as a fielder.

Felsch tops Kauff in fielding, but their hitting is about equal. Robertson is Jackson's superior as a fielder, but probably will fall at the same gait.

The Giant outfield should be an asset and barrage combination for the world's series, with fielding ability to compare favorably with the White Sox.

The Sox outfield will not affect the hitting average of the Giants, but will excel in fielding. The hitting gives the Giants the edge.

FISH IN OCCUPIED FRANCE DESTROYED

Germany's Latest Effort to Devastate Invaded Land is to Rid Rivers and Canals of Fish.

By HENRY WOOD

(United Press Staff Correspondent With The French Armies, Aug. 30 (By Mail).—Germany's latest effort at devastating the invaded portions of France is to rid the rivers, canals and waterways of the invaded regions of fish, the retreating Germans having dynamited the fish out of the streams in an effort to prevent the allies from using them as a means of transportation.

The discovery was only made when the French recently undertook the task of rendering these waterways navigable after the German destruction of bridges, locks, embankments and dams.

The necessity of draining the water of the canals and portions of rivers in order to make possible the removal of the fish has brought to light the numerous fish traps, some hundreds in number, used by the Germans in order to catch practically every fish. Frequently the canals and rivers were blocked up into sections with fishing nets on each end in order to render impossible the escape of a single fish. Evidence has also been found of the use of explosives for stunning the fish and bringing them to surface where they were picked up with hand nets.

Previous to the German occupation of the canals, rivers and waterways of France fish had been brought to a high state of by-product efficiency both in stocking them and for the enforcement of practically free food for fishing. The idea was to keep the supply at its highest pitch at all times. Fishing constituted one of the very important industries of the country, and a careful observance of the fishing laws insured the permanency of the river stocks.

The new idea of depopulating the waterways appears to have been in mind ever since the war started by the Germans in August, 1914. The French, upon regaining the right to restock the rivers and canals in their former plentiful state, are faced with a serious problem in the matter of restocking the streams. Some of the canals and rivers of northern France are being seined for fish of suitable size.

SOME INTERESTING DATA ON WHEAT

Richard Hudson, chief division of farm demonstration for the extension service, has collected some interesting information concerning wheat growing from one hundred and six farmers located in every section of the state. This information collected by the county agents shows that on a total number of 1,848 acres an average yield per acre of 24 bushels was produced at a cost per bushel of 86c. These figures are as near correct as they could be, as the wheat was measured in practically all cases, and the cost per bushel computed by the men who grew the wheat.

When the present prices of wheat are considered, many farmers should take up the work if for no other reason than to supply a sufficient amount of flour for home use. Many growers can greatly increase the average yield as reported hereby a little more care and preparation of the soil, selecting the seed, fertilizing and sowing same.

Another matter of interest in the reports received is the fact that a number of farmers in the coastal plains report yields of from fifteen to thirty bushels per acre. With the present high prices, it is seen that wheat may be grown profitably even in the eastern sections of the state. To deal with wheat, however, several important things should be considered, such as the proper preparation of the soil, sowing so as to escape the Hessian Fly, and yet so that the wheat will have a good start before the freezes come on. The wheat seed also should be treated for smut if it contains this disease. Proper fertilization should also be attended to; and when these things are carefully considered, profitable yields are well assured. In this connection Mr. Hudson states that those who are planning to grow wheat for the first time this year should call on
