KENTUCKY HILL BOYS FIGHT DUEL WITH FISTS

A rough and tumble fight between two husky young mountaineers is one of the exciting features of "Bill Apperson's Boy," in which Jack Pickford will be seen at the Palace Theatre, Thursday.

Mr. Pickford has the part of a lad who is defending the honor of his father, and he goes at the other boy with a vengeance. They fight all over a piece of high ground and finally roll down a steep embankment before Bobby Apperson (Jack Pickford) deals the knockout.

ROMANCE AND BUSINESS.

Happy Combination in Washburn's "It Pays to Advtise."

One of the most popular love themes ever shown portrays in "It Pays to Advertise," a feature to be Paramount Artcraft picture featuring Bryant Washburn which comes to the Palace Theatre today. It depicts the triumph of love over the power of money.

Cyril Martin, the millionaire father of Rodney Martin, forces his boy away from his home when he falls in love with the sister Miriam, secretly. But the boy will not give up the girl, and converting his own his acquaintance and his numerous suits of clothes into ready cash spends a fortune in advertising to create money for scap. Such a demand is created for the supposed soap that his father offers him a fortune for the name. This he makes good without giving up the girl he loves.

NEW OLIVE THOMAS PLAY IS SPLENDID PRODUCTION

A play of rare scenic splendors, of deep emotional moments of stirring dramatic incidents, finely acted and superbly directed is the new Selznick picture, "Out Yonder," starring the charming Olive Thomas (Mrs. Jack Pickford) at the Palace Friday.

The role of "Flotsam," in which Miss Thomas is cast, is totally different from any which she has thus far essayed. Flotsam is a tanned little waif, the daughter of a fish hawker, whose life is spent on a lonely part of the Atlantic. No pains have been spared in the production of the French models that the fair Olive has been provided with every advantage and not she never before has been more charming nor made a greater impression.

Many spectacular incidents and extraordinary scenic effects are embodied in the picture and in the matter of realism Director Ralph Ince has gone far beyond any previous effort.

NEXT SULTAN WILL HAVE ONLY 1 WIFE

Heir Apparent is First Ruler of His Country to Marry for Love

Constantinople, Jan. 13.—Turkey's next Sultan, Abdul Medjid, now the heir apparent, will be the first to have but one wife, and as such she will enjoy the same romantic position as the celebrated Roxalena, the all-powerful favorite wife of Suleiman the Magnificent whose tomb for centuries have attracted visitors to the Suleiman mosque in Constantinople.

Abdul Medjid is regarded as one of the most interesting personalities of Turkey. For 33 years he was a prisoner in the house of his father, Abdul Aziz, who was Sultan for 15 years until his deposition and death in 1876.

"I was happy during long years," he said to The Associated Press "because I married early, at twenty-four, married for love, and then I used my time improving my mind, drawing wisdom from the works of the world's philosophers." He is no longer officially a prisoner. Since the dethronement and sudden death of Abdul Hamid in 1908, and the advent of the young Turks, he has won his way to liberty at least so far as travel in Asia, or in the metropolis, is concerned, and also enjoys complete freedom of speech.

In person he looks not unlike the distinguished gentleman farmer of England or America. Stout, bluff hearty, his dress is of rough, heavy material, with only the red fez which marks him as an out of doors man to indicate his nationality. Which he doesn't smile, which is not often, his graying hair and moustache and wide, Chinese blue eyes give him the thoughtful look which has led Turks to declare he will be a great Sultan if the political, local and international affairs he has shown no to fill his dream of salvaging the wrecks of the Ottoman Empire.

"We have the makings yet of a great people, of a people that will get aligned in the arts of peace and industry under proper conditions," he said, with an air of deep conviction. "Why won't America give us a start?" he asked in a quick, pathetic manner upon mention of the men of the nations defeated in the war.

"Why should we have those hostile war vessels in our harbor a year after the armistice?" he asked, pointing to the ships swinging in the Bosphorus. "Why not settle our affairs, let us rest from the wars without number which we have had?"

The prince was looking out from a second story window, as he talked, of the Dolmabaghcheh Palace, the show place of Constantinople, where he has the use of one wing.

"Aren't the Turks anxious for an American mandate because they thereby see an opportunity to save themselves from partition and the loss of Constantinople?" he was asked.

Here the prince dropped his French and began talking rapidly in Turkish, to Ahmed Emin Bey, a graduate of Columbia University and editor of the nationalist paper, Vakit, who interpreted as follows:

"We have no means of letting the people in America know what kind of people we are and what we thinks. The Turks want the Americans because they know the Americans would treat them honestly and help them develop a rich country to the profit of both. The Americans have never travelled near much, nor gotten to know the simple qualities of our people, who are remarkably honest and hard working. It cannot be said that the Turks have ever betrayed their foreign friends so long as the latter acted in good faith. We have a long tradition of friendship with the liberal western powers. After the Turkish revolution of 1908, we were most anxious to continue these relations.

"But here came our difficulty. These powers (England and France) wished to maintain good relations with the Englishmen who, without our seeking it, were hostile to us, and finally the Russian influence became so strong that were person favorable to Turks in the French and English embassies were seen home by their governments. I personally went to the French and English ambassadors and warned them that if this policy were carried out, we should be driven into a German alliance which would injure both the French and English and ourselves. This warning had no effect, and the Germans began to send us big military missions, also our officers were trained in Germany, so we entered the war on the German side.

"If the Americans don't come to us now, the end of it all may be a partition leading to other wars in which America may get involved. It might be cheaper for America to advance loans on an new rather than to spend billions later on a new war."

Asked if he were a partisan of the nationalist movement, the prince answered: "A person in line for the throne can't become involved in partisan movements but must represent the entire people."

The interview ended by the prince saying: "Now let me let review you. Will America keep her word and sign the peace and enter the league of nations?" Then he shook hands warmly and touched his heart and forehead in sign of farewell, and motored back to his home and studio where he is painting new pictures of his beloved Christian wife and his son and daughter.

STOCKDEALER IS NOW PRAISING IT

Memphis Man Says Troubles Left Him on Taking Tanlac—Now Feels Years Younger.

"Tanlac has got me some my troubles and I am actually feeling years younger than I am," said C. M. Black, prominent Live Stock dealer living at 62 Cox street, Memphis, Tenn.

"All my life I had been a strong healthy man," he continued, "and never had any serious trouble till about ten years ago, when my stomach went to kick me. Having had a sitting out most of doors much of the time and exposed to all kinds of weather I began to suffer a great deal from indigestion and my stomach would swell up and float with gas. My trouble grew worse and finally an operation was necessary. I felt like there was a knot in my stomach and the pain made me miserable and sometimes I would be knocked out for two or three days at a time.

"A few bottles of Tanlac entirely relieved my trouble and I didn't have a pain left. I can eat anything now I want without suffering afterwards and I am so much pleased with the results that I have recommended Tanlac to many people I know during my trips in the country, for I feel that it is a medicine to be relied on."

All druggists sell Tanlac.

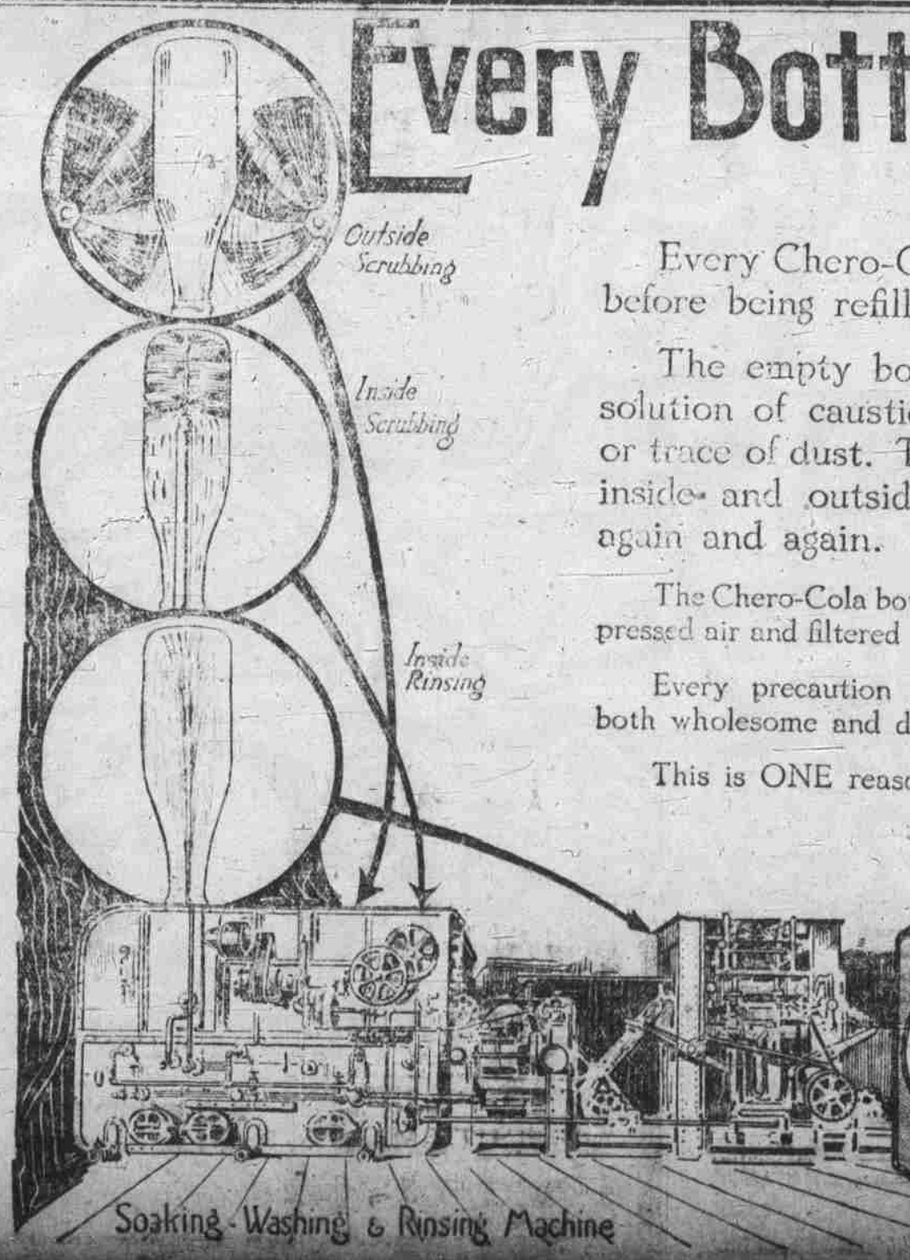
Every Bottle Sterilized



Every Chero-Cola bottle is thoroughly sterilized before being refilled.

The empty bottles are soaked in a boiling hot solution of caustic-of-soda, destroying every germ or trace of dust. They are then thoroughly scrubbed, inside and outside, the operation being repeated again and again.

The Chero-Cola bottle then is rinsed with a combination of compressed air and filtered water, forced in and out under high pressure.

Every precaution is taken to make its contents reach you both wholesome and delightful.

This is ONE reason for Chero-Cola's remarkable popularity.
