GARDEN TIME

Iris rhizomes may be divided any time between July and September. Dig the clump and remove the old flower stalks close to the rhizome. Cut the leaves back about two-thirds of their length. Divide the rhizome, by sectioning with a sharp knife, and save one or two leaf stems on each section. Transplant in good soil, spreading the roots well, and firm the soil around them.

The period between the latter part of June and through July is the best time to make cuttings from most of our ornamental plants. At this time the plants have passed through their succulent growth and the tissues have begun to toughen somewhat, which facilitates rooting.

The rooting medium is very important. It should be free of disease organisms, should hold moisture and at the same time provide good drainage and aeration. There are many mixtures that may be used but perhaps the simplest is equal parts, by volume, of sand and peat moss. No. 7 silica sand is best, sometimes referred to as plasterer's sand. A good rule of thumb to use in determining the grade of sand is that if most of the particles will pass through a common window screen, the sand is too fine for a good rooting medium. Use about six inches of the sand-peat mixture in a flat box or cold frame.

The cuttings should be made in the early morning and kept moist in a damp cloth. Select cuttings from three to five inches in length and remove the bottom leaves. With a trowel or heavy kitchen knift, open rows and place the cuttings in the medium so that they will not be too crowded. Press the medium to the base of the cuttings and thoroughly water.

Place the cuttings where they will have sufficient light but not in direct sunlight. The shade of a tree is good or you can provide shade with burlap. Keep moist at all times but not too wet. Protect from wind with plastic or burlap sides, or window sash, depending upon the size of your box or frame.

In addition to Motor Vehicle Department personnel, the State Wildlife Commission and State Banking Commission also occupy offices in the Motor Vehicle Building in Raleigh.
