A THRILLING REVOLUTIONARY TALE.

[illegible] Lieut.—[illegible]

[illegible] A gentleman, on the day of the [illegible] through a [illegible] to a lofty cottage [illegible] primeval [illegible] above the dark waters [illegible]

[illegible] pale face, and dishevelled [illegible] and a long sword [illegible] clad in [illegible] Revolution, is a Continental named [illegible]

The [illegible] black hair drooping along his [illegible] face, stood in the hall military costume of the Revolution. This is a murderer of Paoli, named D[illegible].

They [illegible] met, and now they fought, not with [illegible] but with long and deadly bowie knives. [illegible] and twisting on the [illegible]

At [illegible] down on the turf, with the [illegible] on his breast—the upraised knife full in the light in his face.

"Quarter! I yield!" gasped the tory, as the knee was pressed [illegible] "Spare me—I yield?"

"My brother!" [illegible] the patriot, in a tone of deadly [illegible] "Brother cried for quarter on the night of Paoli! [illegible] on your knees you struck [illegible] heart. O, I will give you the quarter of Paoli."

And as his [illegible] raised for the blow, and his teeth were clenched with deadly hate, he paused for a moment, and then pinioned the tory's arms, and with a rapid and [illegible] dragged him to the verge of the rock, and held him quivering over the abyss.

"Mercy!" gasped the tory, turning ashy pale by [illegible], as that awful gulf yawned below. "Mercy! I have a wife and child at home—spare me!"

The Continental, with a muscular strength gathered partly [illegible] the murderer once more over the abyss, and then hissed his bitter sneer in his face.

"My brother had a wife and two children. The morning after the night of Paoli that wife was a widow, those children orphans! Ask mercy from them!"

The proposal made by the Continental in mockery and bitter hate was taken in serious earnest by the terror stricken tory. He begged to be taken to the widow and her children, and to have the privilege of begging his life. After a moment of serious thought the patriotic soldier consented. He bound the tory's arms still tighter, placed him on his feet, and led him through the woods. A quiet cottage embossed among the trees broke on their eyes. They entered the cottage. There, beside the desolate hearthstone sat a widow and her children.

She sat there, a matronly woman of about 28 years, with a face fretted by care; a deep, dark eye, and long black hair, hanging in a dishevelled state about her shoulders. On one side was a dark haired boy of some six years; on the other side, a girl one year younger, with light blue eyes. The Bible—an old and venerable volume—lay upon upon her mother's knee. And the pale-faced boy flung himself upon his knees, and confessed that he had butchered her husband on the night of Paoli, and begged his life at her hands.

"Spare me, for the sake of my wife—child!"

He had expected this pitiful moan would touch the widow's heart, but not one relenting gleam softened her face.

"The Lord shall judge between us," she said, in a cold, icy tone that froze the murderer's heart. "Look, the Bible is in my lap. I will close the volume, and let my little son place his fingers at random upon a line, and by that you shall live or die."

This was a strange proposal, made in good faith, of a mild and dark superstition of olden times. For a moment the tory, pale as ashes, was wrapped in deep thought—then in a faint voice he signified his consent.

Raising her dark eyes to heaven, the child proceeded to the Great Fetich, and indeed the finger of fate. She closed the book—she laid it in the lap with a cheek redder than anything in the room except his father's murderer. He took the Bible, and opened it by pages at random, and placed his finger upon a verse.

There was a shriek. The Continental fell free, with a sword to avenge his mother's death, stood vengeance dilating eyes and pouted lips. The culprit, kneeling upon the floor, with his face like disturbed clay, felt his heart leap to his throat.

Then in a clear, bold voice, the widow read this line from the Old Testament. It was short, yet terrible:

"That man shall surely die."

Look! The brother springs forward to plunge the knife into the murderer's heart; but the tory, pinioned as he is, clings to the widow's knees. He begs that one more trial may be made by the little girl, that child of five years old, with golden hair and laughing eyes.

The widow consents. [illegible] With a smile [illegible] she closes the Bible and [illegible] the Bible lay on her mother's knee; she parted the hair away and placed her finger upon a line.

The effort slowly grows deep. [illegible] breath of the prisoner, and the [illegible] grasp of the murderer, disappointed [illegible] The [illegible] and dark-haired boy were [illegible] and, as the sunlight a feeling [illegible] stood breathless, her face [illegible] fingers resting [illegible]

At length, [illegible] eyes upon the page, and read. It was a line from the New Testament:

"Love your enemies!"

Oh! look of terrible majesty, and child-like [illegible] of sublimity that [illegible] never shone before or [illegible] of Wissahicon, after it saved the [illegible] heart.

Now look how wonderful are the ways of Heaven. That very night as the widow sat by her [illegible] set there with a crushed heart and tearless eyes, the door of her husband, who now lay on the [illegible] soil of Paoli—there was a knock at the door. She opened it, and that husband, [illegible] was with young, was [illegible].

He had fallen in Philadelphia [illegible]. He was alive, and his wife panting [illegible]

THE BATTLE OF LOOKOUT MOUNTAIN.

The following letter from a staff correspondent of the Richmond Dispatch gives us the first details that have reached us of the struggle for Lookout Mountain:

ARMY OF TENNESSEE,
Missionary Ridge, Nov. 29th—Morning.

Well, the enemy has assaulted Lookout Mountain today in force, as was intimated in my letter of last night. He probably would do this, in pursuance on a part of the object of his demonstration yesterday—to wit: the turning of our position on the mountain to the extreme right, and the left rear, with a view to cut off which, [illegible] stock was staked. The great [illegible] carried away his [illegible] the night before, but his positions are [illegible] and [illegible] so strongly [illegible] he state to [illegible] 1 o'clock [illegible] with his batteries on Lookout [illegible] fire against our lines along the [illegible] western face of the mountain. [illegible] mountain [illegible] to a dense fog which envelopes Lookout Point and the crest above. At half-past 12 the battle became engaged, and for one hour was terribly joined.

Very few shots were fired—no loss, indeed, for the attempt to enter our entrenchments. The impression prevails well-informed officers that the affair has not been well conducted by the Confederate officers in command on the mountain. Our forces had been much weakened on the right to reinforce by the withdrawal of Walker's Division, which was sent to the right, leaving only Stevenson's and Cleburne's divisions behind, both under command of Gen. Stevenson. Gen. Cheatham arrived on the ground late in the afternoon, having just returned to the army from the time of his return. His division was under the command of Gen. Jackson, the same brigadier in the division. It was thought that these two divisions would have been sufficient to hold the position against a largely superior force; but not so. The Confederates were steadily pushed back from the moment the infantry opened fire until late in the evening, when Gen. Breckinridge went to the assistance of Stevenson with a brigade. The Federals, who had driven the Confederates slowly around the North face of the mountain to Craven's house, and there around almost to the road which leads to the top, were, in their turn, forced back after night some four or five hundred yards. The fight continued until 10 p. m., and even now I can hear an occasional shot while I write.

The troops and the guns on the mountain were brought down safely, only a few commissary stores being left behind. We lost a considerable number of prisoners, nevertheless, early in the day and on the western slope of the mountain, the enemy, it is alleged, having got in the rear of Walthall's brigade under cover of the prevailing fog. One account says that Walthall lost from 500 to 600 prisoners, including nearly the whole of one regiment, the 34th Mississippi. It is not improbable that our loss has been exaggerated somewhat.

Orders have been given to evacuate the mountain and for the whole army to retire across the Chickamauga, in the direction of the station of that name. The loss of Lookout Valley and Brown's Ferry removed all doubt as to the ability of Gen'l Grant to subsist his army in Chattanooga this winter, and rendered the longer possession of Lookout of comparatively little importance, and now that the mountain has passed into his hands there is no reason left why we should longer remain in the mud and water around Chattanooga. Besides Grant has been throwing a heavy force up the river and crossing it over in boats we neglected to burn all this afternoon. A portion of this force consists of cavalry, which have been landed above the mouth of the Chickamauga. Some infantry have also been landed on the east side of that stream—the remainder and much the more numerous body on the west side—all up the Tennessee and some distance above our right wing. This movement greatly endangers the depot and railroad, and furnishes an additional reason for withdrawing across the Chickamauga. Another danger, and a still more serious one, is the probability that Grant will turn our right and get between the main army and Longstreet at Knoxville. It is now well ascertained that Sherman has not gone to the relief of Burnside, as was fully believed a few days ago; but the whole Federal army is here marshaling for our destruction. Perhaps Grant has concluded that he could best succor Burnside by forcing Bragg to retire.

I have just heard that our communications with Knoxville have been cut, probably by the Federal cavalry that crossed the river above this afternoon, and that the depot buildings at Joyner's Station, on the Chattanooga and East Tennessee road have been burnt.

Nov. 28th—2 A. M.—Finding that he could not withdraw his army in time, Gen. Bragg has given orders to mass his whole available force on the right. A battle may be expected to-day. The situation is critical.

REWARDS.

$100 REWARD.

I WILL PAY THE ABOVE REWARD TO ANY one for the delivery to me, in Raleigh, of my fine Hunting Case Gold Watch. Said Watch was stolen from my pocket on the train coming down this side of Salisbury, on Thursday night, by a villain who was spotted at the time and arrested very soon after, but too late, as he had disposed of the Watch in some way, so that it could not be found. Said Watch is marked "J. J. J."—the letters, however, resemble G. T. G. very much.

THOMAS JENKINS,
Nov. 21-tf Raleigh, N. C.

Salisbury Watchman copy 2 times and forward bill.

$500 REWARD.

I WILL GIVE FIVE HUNDRED DOLLARS REward for the apprehension and confinement in any jail within the State, of WILLIAM FINN, a notorious horse thief. Said Finn deserted from Company I, 59th Regiment North Carolina Cavalry about eight months ago, is about thirty years old, about five feet eight or nine inches high, light hair, fair complexion, skin of the face approaching redness, blue eyes, with sharp, keen look, nose somewhat roman, sulky outer look, slow to speak, but when he does speak he speaks short. On some occasions he has passed himself by the name of Johnston.

I have reason to believe the said Finn stole from me on the night of the 7th, (this month,) my fine bay MARE, saddle and bridle. The mare was two years old last Spring, sixteen or seventeen hands high, red bay with black mane and tail, several skinned marks in her forehead; the saddle was of Spanish form, with loose hog skin seat, wool padded on the tree; the seat was stitched. I will give a liberal reward for the delivery of my mare, or for any information that will lead to her recovery.

My residence is on Dutch Buffalow Creek, about ten miles South east from Concord, Cabarrus county. My address, Mt. Pleasant, Cabarrus county, N. C.
