NORTH CAROLINA AT BOSTON.

The indications are that North Carolina will occupy a conspicuous position in the New England Manufacturers' and Mechanics' Institute Fair, which opens in Boston September 5th. Gov. Jarvis has been invited and accepted the invitation to be present and respond to the welcome to North Carolina. The majority of the papers in the State will be represented as the editorial association has made arrangements to visit it in a body. Each one of these will be, so to speak, a representative of the particular section from which he comes.

But the best of all, and the one which will speak with the best effect for North Carolina, is the exhibit which will be made under the management of Dr. Dabney, who has been entrusted with that mission by the Department of Agriculture. He reports gratifying progress, and in a letter a few days ago to the Raleigh News and Observer, says among other things:

"The lumber men marvel at the magnitude, the variety and the beauty of our woods. They are very enthusiastic over our big cherry trees, our black walnuts, our curly maples, curly poplar and curly pine. One lumber man who has made a business of traveling all over this country from Maine to California, said to me yesterday that he did not know that such timber existed in this country. I was yesterday with the stone workers who are polishing our marbles and granites.

"Some of the specimens are ready and I was astonished at their beauty and novelty. The Pee Dee black granite presents now a mirror like surface equal to anything I ever saw. The foreman of the shop said it was as fine as any granite in the world, better than a great deal which is sold here at $2.50 a foot. Some of our porphyritic granites he pronounced perfectly unique. We have some specimens here containing olive-green [illegible] purple quartz and black hornblende, which attract great attention, they are so odd. Our gray and flesh colored marbles from Cherokee and Nantahala are as fine, they say, as any to be found anywhere. The flesh colored marble ought to be as valuable for ornamental work as the colored Italian marbles. I only mention a few things which have been prepared and examined by experts. I know that we have enough surprises and delights for these people when we shall get all of our boxes unpacked to keep them in a state of electrical shock for two months at least."

It would be difficult to convince the Bostonians, or any other people, without ocular proof, that forty different varieties of marble are found in one county in this State, and that not a very large county either, some of which are as beautiful as any marble ever taken out of the ground. With the exception of the mining belt proper there has been, until within the past few years, practically nothing known about the wonderful and varied resources of this State, even among our own people, much less people at a distance. But the Agricultural Department, encouraged and co-operated with as it has been by the State press and progressive business men of the State, has done much in disseminating valuable information on this subject, while some of our railroads, catching the spirit, have also done much in securing fine collections of our stones, minerals, timbers, &c, for exhibition.

With the zeal in this direction, and which is increasing every year, we have hopes that it will not be many years before the people of other States will have some conception of what North Carolina really is, and what an inviting field she presents to the toiler and to the capitalist. There is no better way to accomplish this than by good exhibits of her products, which speak in unmistakable language for themselves at these industrial expositions.

The Wilmington Post is savage on Gen Holden for withdrawing from the Republicans and throws rocks at him after this style:

"The Republican Liberal party of North Carolina is to be congratulated on this happy riddance; now if Kirk and Burgen will follow the infamous Holden, we will all throw up our hats with great joy. We thank God that W W Holden has gone; he has been traitor to his party for the past twelve years, and he has been a traitor to his State for twenty-three years; he has never belonged to anything he didn't betray and ruin, and he is the last hair that it takes to break the Democratic camel's back."

This may be all so, but it seems to us that it took 'em a long time to discover it.

A sensational story comes from the Yellowstone country that the cowboys have formed a plot to capture the President and hold him for ransom, and we have no doubt there are plenty of innocent-minded people who will believe it. If they will just capture Mike Sheridan, the chronicler of the party who tells those fish and bear stories, we'll say bully for the cowboys.

SOUTHERN IRON INDUSTRY.

A correspondent of the Baltimore Manufacturer's Record quotes a leading Alabama furnace man as saying that his works were steadily producing pig iron at $8 per ton, and as further saying that the cheap labor and cheap material in the South enables it to produce iron at lower figures than England can do. Virginia produces iron at $12, Tennessee at $11, per ton, which in Pittsburg, Pa, it costs $19. With these facts looming up who can doubt that the South will ultimately control the iron industry of this country? As another evidence of the ability of the Southern furnaces not only to hold their own but to beat their Northern competitors, while numbers of Northern furnaces and mills have been compelled to shut down, temporarily at least, not one Southern furnace has been stopped but several of them have added to their works to increase their capacity. And yet this industry in the South is but in its infancy, with both limited experience and limited capital to back it, while in the North it has had the best of skill and capital unlimited. But capital goes where it pays best irrespective of geographical lines, and skill is commanded by capital, and both of these will soon seek Southern fields which present such striking figures as those we have quoted above.

As the spindles and looms will go to the cotton fields, so will the forges and the anvils go to the iron veins which yield freely and cheaply. And while the South is destined to be not only the cotton producing but the cotton manufacturing section of the world so will she be the great iron producing and iron manufacturing section. From these will spring other and varied industries yet but little known in the South, and heretofore monopolized as the weaving of cotton and the manufacture of iron have been in the North.

The Philadelphia papers publish a list of 106 divorce cases docketed in that city for the September term of court.

The annual industrial exposition in Cincinnati will begin September 5th and continue till October 7th.

AN AERONAUT'S PERIL.

Hanging by Two Fingers From a Balloon 1,800 Feet From the Earth.

PARIS, August 25—At Royan, on the Gironde, there was on Friday a scene perhaps unprecedented in the annals of ballooning. M Gratien, a well known aeronaut, was about to make an ascent in a hot air balloon called "La Vidouvillaise."

Mlle Albertine, the heroine of several balloon ascensions, was seated in the car, and M Gratien was holding in his right hand a loose coil tied to one of the cords that served to attach the balloon. The balloon unexpectedly broke loose, and the cord, unrolling itself with lightning rapidity, caught in a sort of running knot around the first and second fingers of Gratien's right hand.

Gratien was immediately whisked off into the air 600 metres high. In vain he tried to haul himself up on the cord and loop it over his arm. After frantic efforts he became exhausted and hung at the end of the cord suspended solely by his two fingers and suffering excruciating agony. Owing to the jerking of the balloon the cord cut like a razor through the flesh to the bone.

In that situation Gratien was carried to the distance of nearly four miles, at the height of 600 metres above the earth. Mlle Albertine, overcome by the horror of the situation, fainted away and sank helpless to the bottom of the car.

As the air in the balloon became cool the balloon descended, but bumped against the earth in the midst of a dense mass of thorny shrubbery.

Gratien was not only stripped of his clothes, but his skin was literally torn in strips from his body as he was dragged for nearly half a mile through the thorny branches. Finally some peasants managed to cut the cord. Gratien appeared to be a mass of wounds and to be near bleeding to death. Strange to say, he did not loose conciousness for a single instant. He suffered no internal injury, and although his condition is critical, he probably will recover.

When the rope was cut and the balloon was freed from the weight of Gratien's body it again arose in the air, carrying off Mlle Albertine. By singular good fortune it soon landed in the marsh and mademoiselle at last stood on terra firma. She was sorely distressed in mind and badly scared, but otherwise safe and sound.

Fertilizers.

The Baltimore American furnishes some very interesting statistics as to the fertilizer business of that city. We are told that a few years ago the whole amount of fertilizers used annually in this country, in tons, could be readily counted upon one's fingers. For the year just closed the aggregate in round numbers, is approximated at 850,000 tons, and at $30 per ton the average price of the material, the value of the trade amounts to over $25,000,000. It will not stop here, for it is a business that is destined, in the near future, to grow to much greater proportions. The West has hardly as yet begun to use any kind of fertilizers. This is shown by the fact that of the States using them, as exhibited by a carefully compiled report soon to be published, not a State west of the Mississippi river is mentioned, except for a very trifling supply. It has been stated that in round numbers 850,000 tons of fertilizers were consumed the past season, and of this vast amount Georgia, with 125,000 tons, takes the lead. North Carolina and South Carolina come next, each being credited with 90,000 tons; Pennsylvania and Maryland, each 80,000 tons; Virginia and West Virginia, together, 80,000 tons; the New England States, combined, about 60,000 tons; Alabama, 45,000; New York, 30,000 tons; New Jersey, 25,000 tons; Mississippi and Ohio, each 20,000 tons; Delaware and Tennessee, each 10,000 tons, and other States in small quantities, an aggregate of about 40,000 tons.

Of this vast total Baltimore manufactures or distributes 350,000 tons valued at $10,000,000.

Georgia with 125,000 tons, takes the lead; but she need not brag of it. For these foreign fertilizers she paid out $3,750,000. We have great affection for Baltimore, but we prefer to have Georgia save some of these millions by making her own manures.

A Comparison.

What a power Samuel J Tilden might now be in the Democratic party if he only had the candor and the courage of his convictions as did that grand old man, Jeremiah S Black!

A FALLEN APOSTLE.

The Sad Story of Young Ansley Gray's Romantic Career.

Denver News.

Late Saturday evening the police arrested a young man named Ansley Gray as a suspicious character, and lodged him in the city jail. This young man has a history which is a stronger plea for temperance than was ever penned by the most gifted apostle of total abstinence. His father was Judge Gray, of Mineral Point, Wis. He graduated with distinguished honors at the Wisconsin State University in 1879, and adopted the practice of the law as a profession. The same year he was elected as a Democrat to a seat in the lower house of the Legislature. His seat was contested, and a Republican majority decided in favor of the contestant. Young Gray's argument in his own behalf was one of the finest addresses ever uttered on a like occasion, and it made him famous.

He moved to Milwaukee and began to practice law. His first case was in Cupid's court. He won the affections of a beautiful and moderately wealthy young lady, whose home is in Rachine, Wis.

Her relatives objected to the marriage of the pair, as they feared that Gray's affection was too much influenced by the girl's money, but love laughs at relatives as well as locksmiths, and elopement and marriage followed.

Once in possession of a fat bank account, young Gray began a swift career to destruction. He squandered his wife's money right and left. The prodigal son wasn't a marker to him. Neglect and abuse of the woman who loved and trusted him followed as a matter of course.

The end came soon. A fortune of $40,000 was spent in less than 6 months, and the usual course of borrowing succeeded. Gray, having exhausted his credit in Milwaukee and Chicago, moved to Dakota, and was almost immediately elected a member of the Territorial Legislature. He was sent to jail for contempt of court, and then started out with the apparent determination of drinking all the whiskey in Bismark. He came as near it as any one man could, but he did not succeed.

His next experiment was to turn temperance lecturer, and he was a great success in the prohibition field. He made a tour of Iowa in favor of the prohibitory amendment of that State, and converts followed his eloquent addresses.

Since then he has been a preacher, a lawyer, an auctioneer, a side show man, and everything else that requires a good talent for talk.

But his life has been a disgraceful failure, when it might have been a shining success. At 28 he is a wreck lying in jail, his past a disgrace and his future full of despair.

His manner since his sojourn in Denver began seems to indicate insanity. He was booked for an address at the temperance meeting on last Thursday evening, but he failed to put in an appearance. Saturday afternoon he wandered along Larimer street, looking bloated and stupid, and about 6 o'clock he perched himself on an empty dry goods box and stared vacantly at the passers-by. He claims to have been a Methodist preacher of late, and when arrested had a letter from a prominent divine of that church in this city in his pocket. His story is a sad one, but it must be said that he seemed to prefer dissipation to decency, and having sowed the wind, it is probable that he will reap the whirlwind.

Two Stories of Judge Black.

Boston Herald.

On one occasion, when attacked on the Democratic side of the House, Thad Stevens highly eulogized Black as a lawyer and a man, but expressly withheld any indorsement of his politics, which were as bad, he said, as possible. In their originality, their courage and their inflexibility, there were points of resemblance between Stevens and Black, though in other respects the widest dissimilarity prevailed. There were no social relations between them; they scarcely ever spoke, but up to the time of his death, Stevens cherished the highest respect for him, and Black has said: "When Mr Stevens died, he was unequaled as a lawyer, and he said the smartest things that ever were said, but his mind, so far as a sense of obligation to God is concerned, was a howling wilderness."

One day Black was surrounded by a bevy of his personal friends on the floor of the House, among the rest Judge Mercer, then the Bradford Congressman, who turned to him and said: "Judge Black, you have more friends on this side of the House than on your own. You ought to be a Republican. If you would join us, we would appreciate you and give you due prominence." To which Judge Black made reply that he knew it all to be true; the Republicans were good fellows; he would like to belong to them, and there was only one thing in the way. "If," he said, "there was no hereafter, I would join the Republican party at once. Nothing deters me but the fear of hell."

Conkling's Position.

Rochester Union.

Mr. Conklin seems to occupy a more creditable position in relation to Dorsey than almost any other Republican leader. He was present at neither the Fifth Avenue conference nor the Delmonico dinner seven months later. Most of the great moral statesmen who attended both those celebrated gatherings would now be glad to occupy Mr. Conkling's relation to them; but they cannot destroy the record.
