Farming on Business Principles.

The articles which have appeared recently in the Southern Cultivator and other agricultural journals about how well farms do or do not pay, or what they might be made to pay, and what they never would pay, remind me of one special instance of successful farming in German. * * * * This instance of the success of an intelligent business man, on farms where before him a number of practical and "scientific" farmers had failed, has settled conclusively the question my mind whether farms can be made to pay handsome profits or not; and also convinces me that the successful man must neither be a purely practical nor theoretical farmer, but that a practical, common sense business head must be his first requirement. Some of the Cultivator readers may say "Well, that may all be nice and good in Europe, where labor is cheap and provisions dear." To this I can answer That is true, but it is more than balanced by two things: first, by the high price of land; second, by the peculiar way land has for generations been subdived in middle Germany at the death of an owner and intermixed with that of other owners, so that the extreme distance of pieces of land of one farm of say 800 or 400 acres is quite frequently as much as five or six miles, and makes the use of farming implements quite expensive, if not impossible, besides wasting the time in going to and fro. But also the wages of good farm hands are today not as low as they used to be twenty or thirty years ago; the best steady men get from $80 to $100 a year and board, day laborers, at harvest time, from sixty to seventy five cents per day, and in extreme times even quite considerably more. Besides, boarding such hands here is much cheaper than in Germany, where beef is in rural districts from fifteen cents upwards, mess pork and bacon from twenty cents upwards, etc. Now, when I compare the conditions over there with those in America, the situation is even very much in favor of the United States. Not to succeed, like that of the party in question, the rule, but rather the exception Though I know quite a number of farmers there who have done well, I know a good many more who, under more favorable circumstances than those described above, have been sitting thirty or forty years on one and the same farm, where the Lord could provide anyhow, yet they are not a whit better off today than on the day they came there. They have just made a living, some a very good one, but nothing more. That Europe, and especially Germany, has no advantage over this country also finds its proof in the fact that a large percentage of the German emigrants are farmers, not only farm-hands, but men who used to own their farms at home out and out, but were unable to make a living, and either sold out before a collapse or were sold out by their creditors. If in the United States a farmer has his place clear, nothing is as easy for him as to make a living on it; the industrious man will always make a good living and lay something by if he is very saving; the lazy man, a living anyhow, in spite of his indolence. It is sometimes most astonishing how much time some farmers have to whittle away at a piece of wood, smoke their pipes or have a talk with the neighbors, or what is worse, to go fishing, hunting or "visiting," but how rarely they get a chance to do a square day's work on their frrms! Still they live for all that! They may look like "rag-a-muffins" or scarecrows, but on closer inspection they can yet be recognized as human beings. While it is quite easy to make simply a living on a farm, to be really successful or grow rich by farming, it requires as much business tact as in any other pursuit. There as here it is as the saying of the old German proverb which I will try to translate, "How I care so I fare."—Southern Cultivator.

M. Russell is on a visit to Wilmington. So is miss Rosa Moore.

Mr. C. S. Hewitt lost a good horse last week; died from colic we believe.

The weather is so hot that the matches will catch fire if you lay them in the sun.

Clams, fish and soft crabs are plentiful now and the mullets are getting fat and lazy.

Mr. G. W. Ward has taken a school at Gum Branch, will commence next Monday the 25th inst.

Miss Minnie Ward is home now, will remain home for a month or more before returning to her school.

Schooners Lizzie, Gold Leaf and E. Hamers is in port, latter loaded for Baltimore with shingles. Schr [illegible] cleared for Wilmington, N. C., with 234 barrels turpentine.

Elijah Week of the firm of Taylor & Week has a few of the largest watermelons we have seen this season, new kind called Jordan grays. I saw some that weighed 50 lbs.

Mr. Editor I don't think it is hardly worth while to write this week. It seems the mails have got to doing as they please, and we hardly can get a letter from here to New Berne on regular time.

Mr. Russell is putting up a fertilizer gin in this place. We see in last JOURNAL where A. J. Hurst carried cotton to your city lately. Mr. H. is one of our safe men of these hard time.

The Masonic burial service over the remains of Brother A. Coston came off last Sunday, about 140 people including about 75 Masons were in attendance. The funeral was not preached, was put off until October next.

Mr. G. W. Smith is putting up a store, dwelling and fish house on the Hammock place where he will, he says, buy all the fish and clams, besides produce of all kinds he can this fall—his fishery is at Shelly Point near Swansboro.

Rev. W. H. Puckett assisted by Rev. J. W. Gurganus, from Goldsboro, held a large protracted meeting at Bethlehem church last week in Carteret county. We were there a few days during the hot weather but left before the meeting closed. We hear several joined the church.

Our prayer meeting here still progresses, carried on by Bros. Joe Ward and J. Mebones, sometimes assisted by Bro. Geo. T. Farnell, who last Sunday night read one of Sam Jones' sermons for the benefit of our people here. The sermon was well adapted to our people and hit some of them so hard they squirmed.

Irish Taters made this season 12 bushels good irish potatoes from one peck seed. We thought that pretty good. We are having some watermelons. Mr. Sol. Gornto and sister, Mrs. Hewitt, his nephew, Solomon and niece, Miss Nannie Hewitt were in town this week. Miss Nannie and her Uncle went to Beaufort and Morehead. Mr. and Mrs. John W. Rodges from up the country are in town.

Mr. Piram M. Russell of Carteret county, is 76 years old, is he says, the 15th child of his parents, and he has in his possession some very old and interesting historical relics, handed down to him from his ancient ancestors. First he has the will of his great grandfather, whose name was Habiculk Russell, and died in 1752; a shotgun bought by the same in 1770; a long single barrel brass mounted flint and stell lock, whole stocked, and from looks a No. 1 gun now; pocket book, account book, pepper gourd, spice gourd and white oak split basket belonging at first to these aged people, and kept in good order now by the present owner. Mr. P. M. Russell has the population of the county of carteret, and amount of taxes, &c., of 1802 as follows: 447 white and 295 black poll;—poll tax $100 per head; 136,095 acres of land taxed $453 65;—Beaufort town property tax $55.15, and lots of other old relics and papers belonging to these ancient people. Mr. R.'s maternal great-grandfather was named John Melson, whose son Edmond, Mr. Russell's grandfather, lived near the mouth of New river in 1815 at which time the great storm of that year nearly drowned all of Mr. Melson's family, he saving himse'f by getting on top of some pieces of timber and floating up New river several miles. This was afterwards called the great Melson storm of 1815. Mr. Russell has a pocket knife 34 years old, this he found himself in New Berne in 1855. He has also about $250 old N. C. bank bill money that look new and bright.

The Shooting of Stonewall Jackson at Chancellorsville.

After night fell, Stonewall Jackson rode out with his staff to reconnoiter in front of the line he had gained. It was his idea to stretch completely around in the rear of Hooker and cut him off from the river.

The night was dark and Jackson soon came upon the Union lines. Their infantry drove him back, and as he returned in the darkness, his own soldiers began firing at their commander, of course mistaking his party for the enemy. Jackson was shot in the hand and wrist, and in the upper arm at the same time. His horse turned, and the general lost his hold of the bridle-rein; his cap was brushed from his head by the branches; he reeled, and was caught in the arms of an officer. After a moment he was assisted to his mount, his wound was examined and a litter was brought. Just then the Union artillery opened fire again, and a murderous fire came down upon the party through the woods and the darkness. One of the litter bearers stumbled and fell, and the others were frightened; they laid the litter on the ground, the furious storm of shot and shell sweeping over them like hail. Jackson attempted to rise, but his aide came head him down till the tempest of fire was lulled. Then the wounded general was helped to rise, and walked a few steps in the forest but he became faint, and was laid again in his litter. Once he rolled to the ground, when an assistant was shot, and the litter fell. Just then General Pender, one of his subordinates, passed; he stopped and said.

"I hope you are not seriously hurt General. I fear I shall have to retire my troops, they are so much broken."

Gen. Jackson looked up at once, and exclaimed

"You must hold your ground, General Pender, you must hold ground, sir."

This was the last order he ever gave. He was borne some distance to the nearest house, and examined by the surgeon; and after midnight his left arm was amputated at the shoulder.

When Lee was told that his most trusted lieutenant had been wounded, he was greatly distressed, for the relations between them were most tender.

"Jackson has lost his left arm," said Lee, "but I lost my right arm. St. Nicholas.

RENOVATE YOUR

Feathers!!

Old or New Feathers Thoroughly Dusted, Steamed, Dried, and Rendered Perfectly Odorless.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

It has well known fact that all feathers in consequence of use by many causes become tainted and hard, dusty and soiled, fragile and not healthy. All feathers in use for one or more years ought to be cleaned or renovated, also no well informed person will use a bed feather that has not been purified and made odorless, which can only be done by a liberal use of live steam. We now call your attention to this fact, and state that we are now prepared at short notice to renovate your feathers by the Steam Process Patent Feather Renovator, which will take place of operation for a few weeks longer at New Berne, N. C. This machine has been used exclusively for years past in some of the Eastern and Western states and Canadas, with the best results and must give entire satisfaction.
