Allard Alston Now Heads Durham FCD

DURHAM - It was announced Thursday that the Ford Foundation has awarded an additional one-year grant in the amount of $400,000 to the Foundation for Community Development to continue its program of economic development in several black communities of the State.

This most recent action brings the total support from Ford for the 4 1/2 year old Durham based FCD to $1,472,000.

Nathan Garrett, whose retirement as FCD's executive director, was announced two weeks ago, released the following statement: "This latest grant is clear evidence of the confidence which the Ford Foundation has in the board and staff of FCD to provide badly needed support to organizations of low-income people."

"Before making the grant, Ford took a close look at our program, the quality of our staff, and perhaps most importantly, at the image FCD enjoys among the thousands of people whose lives we touch."

"Ford has known for some time of my plans to return to my practice as a Certified Public Accountant. Its decision to make the grant despite this fact demonstrates its faith in the ability of the total organization to carry on."

Allard Alston, who replaces Garrett effective August 1, stated that the $400,000 will be used to continue a program of support to organized groups of low-income people in establishing viable business ventures which will contribute to the economic growth of Black communities. These groups will also be assisted in developing programs and projects dealing with housing, health, social justice, education and other problems faced by them.

According to Alston, FCD will train twelve interns during the year who will be available to assist community groups in creating and/or managing early education centers and profit making businesses which will be locally controlled. Plans are also under-

Former College Students Begin Serving Sentences

BY RON WASHINGTON

DENMARK, S. C. — Rather than continue to be hounded by South Carolina authorities, three "brothers," Oliver Francis, Ali Raysor, and Alvin "X" Evans, former Voorhees students turned themselves in Friday, July 7, to begin serving time on charges that grew out of a 1969 Black student rebellion.

On April 28, 1969, black students at Voorhees College in Denmark, South Carolina called a student strike to protest the ineffective education received by Black students at Voorhees. 75 students occupied an administration building until then college president, John F. Potts, agreed to student demands.

Later, school business managers, O. H. White and the white trustees board chairman, J. Kenneth Morris, brought charges against 36 students. Still later, it was decided to pick 8 scapegoats and punish the brothers who spearheaded the student struggle on Voorhees campus.

Subsequently, Gerald Kenyatta Albert, James Bryant, James Epps, Alvin "X" Evans, Oliver Francis, Sam Mintz, Michael Moore and Ali Raysor were convicted of common law rioting for which they now face from 18 months to two years in jail.

Convicted in July, 1970, the eight young men remained out on appeal bond and continued to work throughout the state of South Carolina doing whatever they could to uplift and work for Black people.
