MR. CRITTENDEN ON THE PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION.

Hon. J. J. Crittenden made a speech at Louisville, Ky., on the 2d inst. He compared the candidates as follows:

ABE LINCOLN.

Mr. Lincoln may be a very worthy, upright and honest man. He married a Kentucky girl, and that is a wholesome influence. [Laughter and applause.] I am told he is a Kentuckian himself, which is another salutary fact. Mr. Lincoln may be a very honest, worthy man; but in a political point of view, he must be regarded as the representative of the party that has made him its leader. He is the Republican leader, and, like all political leaders, he must obey the party that brought him into existence or be put down and crushed out by it.

* * * * * *

His election would create and continue an alarm that would keep the country agitated and unhappy, if not create an opposition and resistance to the government itself. It is greatly to be desired that he should not be elected. It is hardly necessary to say that we should be forced to apprehend from Mr. Lincoln's election that the impulse which the Anti Slavery feeling would receive therefrom would go farther than it has yet gone, and create still greater danger to the peace and security of the South. This pervading apprehension would necessarily make his election a great calamity.

MR. DOUGLAS.

I know Mr. Douglas very well, ladies and gentlemen. From Mr. Douglas, personally, I should apprehend no danger. I have never been a Democrat, as you all know. [Applause.] A frank, fair and honest opponent of the Democratic party, I have ever been voting upon Whig principles from the time to the last. [Increased applause.] But I have known Mr. Douglas in the public councils, and have acted with him. Although generally opposed, and especially upon party questions, we have at times acted together, and particularly upon one memorable occasion when we acted together in opposition to that infamous Lecompton usurpation. [Deafening applause.] Mr. Douglas was there making a great sacrifice to his sense of duty. [Applause.] He was sacrificing his connection on that occasion with many old political friends, he was sacrificing as flattering prospects for the highest offices in the Government as any man in the country had. I fully believe he did what he conceived to be his duty; and, in defiance of all opposition, the rack of the President, pretended friends, and open foes, he acted like a man. [Tremendous cheering.] He might have been mistaken in what he did, but that little diminished the value of his act. He thought he was right, and he knew he was making a sacrifice, and he was capable of making it when he believed the interests of his country demanded it.—[Cheers.] I can have no quarrel with him; he is a Union man. [Cheers.] And a Union man I can always trust, when I believe him to be sincere and in earnest, as I believe Douglas to be. [Continued applause.]

Mr. C. proceeded to argue that the Bell and Everett platform was sufficient, and showed that a great deal more was said about the Territorial Slavery question than occurred. He illustrated the state of the country by the following story:

Two Indians were walking out together on a bright mid summer night. One looked up to the heavens, thick with innumerable stars, and exclaimed: "Oh, that I had a blanket as spacious as the heavens; that it should be an estate worth having!" His companion exclaimed: "Oh, that I had a wife as numerous as the stars above!"—To which the other, "in the name of heaven, what would you do with such an infernal lot?" "Why," said he, "I would turn them on to your farm." [Laughter.] "You would, aye!" Upon that they quibbled and fought for an hour. [Great laughter.] Now, it does seem to me that we are about to make out just such a moonshine case. [Continued laughter.]

But still this is not the question. Mr. Douglas represents an old party at fread; in the first instance, with the Republican party calling forth its bitterest opposition, and now at feud with the Southern wing of his party, that has rejected him for another. He would be an Administration of constant conflict. The country could hope for no restoration of peace and good government. He, therefore, ought not to be preferred to my judgment to Bell and Everett. [Cheers.] I have spoken not to implement Mr. Douglas merely; I have spoken because I desired to give my testimony to his truth. I believe Mr. Douglas to be a patriot, and I know him to be a man by all the evidences that one man can give another of his sentiments. [Applause.] He is a generous, noble man, speaking what he thinks, and doing what he knows to be right. [Renewed applause.] But I am opposed to Douglas and for Bell and Everett. [Immense applause.]

JOHN C. BRECKINRIDGE.

And here again, as in respect to Mr. Douglas, my objection is not to the candidate as an individual. I should hope that Breckinridge is not a disunion man.—[A voice—Yes he is.] He ought not to be. He belongs to a tribe of faithful, devoted men—the tribe of Kentuckians.—[Great applause.] He must have been seduced away from the path of his duty, far from the path in which all the impulses of blood ought to carry him, if he has become a disunionist. But Mr. Breckinridge has made himself the head of a party. He is part and parcel of the present purposes of that party, and, as in the case of Lincoln, we must judge of his public course by the party that he consents to represent.

Who are they? There is not a disunionist south of Mason and Dixon's line that I know of who does not belong to that party.—[Applause.] We have for a long time heard warnings of disunion in the South—more than mutterings—more than whisperings of such sentiments. We have seen them proclaimed by high men in high places.

ORGANIZATION OF SOUTHERN DISUNIONISTS.

These sentiments pervade the South, and have sapped the body and soul of the party that has nominated our fellow-citizen, Mr. Breckinridge, as its candidate for the Presidency. Is there no danger that by electing him you would give new energy to that secession impulse, and new power to this disunion sentiment, and to the cause of disunion? Mr. Breckinridge himself follows where he leads. He is part and parcel of the party. You see this by his nomination, his acceptance of it, and can hence see with clearness the disasters that would follow his success. Possibly it may be the policy of those who nominated him that Old Kentucky to this new Confederacy. Old Kentucky is quite an important state in this Union. [Applause.] She is the heart of it—she is the heart of it.—[Immense enthusiasm.] To obtain her concurrence is of the greatest possible consequence to those who fancy that they can make a Republic in the South more glorious and more prosperous than the great Republic of which we now form a part. Such have been their plans for a long time. Kentucky and Tennessee, which old General Gaines called the two military States of the Union. [Long and loud applause.] They are two States not easily overcome, and though I would not diminish the honor of Mr. Breckinridge's nomination, as he himself conceives it, yet I imagine there are thousands in the South who would go for Mr. Breckinridge mainly in the hope that it might be the means of annexing Kentucky as a sort of frontier province to this Southern Republic of Cotton States that is to be made. [Cheers and laughter.] If they can bring about that union, if they can bring over Old Kentucky and make her an ally of their scheme for the dismemberment of this Confederacy and the erection of a separate Republic, it would be a matter of very little consequence whether Mr. Breckinridge was elected or not. [Continued cheering.]

NO DISSOLUTION OF THE UNION IF LINCOLN IS ELECTED.

If a man is constitutionally elected President of the United States, shall a minority of the people start up and say, "We will make a revolution, this man shall not be President of the United States, we will by force of arms resist it, and drive him out?" Is not that a destruction of all government? The majority must of necessity rule in all republics, and if you do not like the law of the majority, set aside all free government, and go to some place where you will have no elections, where hereditary rulers shall take the place of your elective government. Who will say that if Mr. Lincoln, or anybody else, is constitutionally elected to the Chief Magistracy, he shall not take his seat? Have we come to this? If so, let us change the whole government, and let the minority rule, though even then would not the majority men object to the election of a man by the minority?

The Constitution provided that the term of the President should be comparatively short, but four years, thinking that now and then a dangerous man might be elected, but that he could not, with all the guards that Congress set up around him, in the short space of four years, do much to undermine and destroy the liberties of the people.—Shall we now introduce the principle of anarchy, and say the man who does not please us (the minority) shall not take his seat? Would not there be time, when he misgoverns, to call him to account, according to the constitutional forms provided for such cases?

It is upon great principles that Governments depend, and these great principles must bear a relationship to you. They must be recognized, or you have no government at all—nothing but anarchy.

Died,

Died, at the house of her brother, Col. Wm. W. Walkup, in Union county, N. C., on the morning of the 25th ult., of chronic bronchitis, after an illness of several months, Mrs. ANN J., wife of D. D. A. Belk, of Lancaster District, S. C., and daughter of the late Robert Walkup, of North Carolina, aged 34 years.

The deceased was for many years and until her marriage, a member of Six Mile Creek Presbyterian Church; upon her marriage she connected herself with the Associate Reformed church at Shiloh, and afterwards to Gill's creek, S. C. She adorned the doctrines of her faith by a pious and exemplary life and a Godly conversation; and gave the most convincing evidence, to all those around her, upon her death-bed, of her interest in a Saviour's love, and her assurance of a blessed immortality.

She was an affectionate wife, a pious mother, a kind sister and an amiable friend. She left a disconsolate husband, two orphan children, two full brothers and numerous other relatives and friends who lament her untimely fate; but who feel well assured that their loss is her eternal gain.—Com.

Mr. JONATHAN JACKSON ROSS was born the 10th of January, 1829, in that part of Mecklenburg county now embraced in Union county, N. C., where he lived until about 3 years ago, when he moved to Tishomingo county, Miss., where he married on the 19th of May, 1860, and had only enjoyed the pleasures of the married life until the 28th July following, when death, that great enemy of mankind approached and claimed him as his victim; and parting with all he loves to love and cherish here, his immortal soul went to join the company of those who are singing the praises of God high up in the eternal world. B.

In Helena, Arkansas, (his place of residence) on the 26 July, Hon. MARK WALLACE ALEXANDER, aged 30 years. He was the only son of the late Lawson Henderson Alexander, who removed from North Carolina to Arkansas about 1835. He was born in Burke county, 20th June, 1830.

PETER WOLF was born in Mecklenburg co., N. C., and died in Henry co., Ga., August 10, 1860, aged 72 years. He joined the M. E. Church at Wharton's meeting house 35 or 40 years ago, moved to Georgia in 1836.

He has been a useful exhorter for the last ten or twelve years. His life was uniform, and he was one of the most conscientious men the writer ever knew. In regard to the observance of the Sabbath he had but few equals. He was severely afflicted for nearly twelve months but never was heard to complain. His prayer was "Lord help me to bear my affliction cheerfully." He died as he did friend and kinsman—Rev. James B. Turner, attend my bier, say at the grave what you think ought to be said. I want no funeral preached. Bury me away, and forget me as soon as possible. I want the memory to be remembered. It was literally true in his case that when called to die he had nothing to do but to die. I may truly say in the language of the Psalmist "Mark the perfect man and behold the upright for the end of that man is peace."
