What is Their Policy?

President Harrison's manner of carrying out his determination expressed some time ago, to place in office, at the South, only those men who stood high in their party and had the confidence of their neighbors, is quite a slam on the white Republicans of this section. The Postoffice Department seems to prefer negro route agents to white men. We suppose Mr. Wanamaker, in placing in office the half dozen or more negroes on the mail cars in this State, thinks he is following out the idea of the President that only the very best Southern men in his party should succeed to the offices, help by the white Democrats.

This departure from what was supposed to be the President's policy toward the South has again stirred up enmosity of the Northern press, and this and the question as to what he and his Cabinet will do with the Civil Service law are the all absorbing questions just now. It seems to us that the controlling idea of the present administration is to run the government in the best interest of the Republican party, but how to do this they do not exactly know. The administration seems to be beating about from one idea to another with no fixed policy, or else Mr. Harrison and his Cabinet are so insincere that no reliance whatever can be put in their statements and pledges. The course pursued by the Post-office Department, in preferring negroes to white men for route agents in this State is certainly, not in keeping with the President's pledge that none but men of high standing in their community should be placed in office. Has he changed his mind since then or was he trying to fool somebody when he made that statement?

In regard to the Civil Service, the course pursued by the administration is in direct opposition to the sentiments expressed in the President's inaugural address. There now seems to be a determination on the part of the Cabinet to ignore this law entirely. Things seems to be badly muddled. We say "it is none of our funeral," so let them go ahead.—Tobacco Plant.

HOW IS IT?

Is the world getting worse? Is civilization and Christianity losing their influence? Not at all. Every day lifts us higher in the scale of being and brings us nearer to God.

How is it then that wickedness is rampart and crime holds high carnival? White-Caps in the North, destroying the peace of communities, and negroes in the South rioting in murder?

It is the efforts of malcontents and ruffians to throw off the restraints of law in one case, and the overflow of malignant passions, inflamed by unprincipled miscreants, in the other.

Within the last few days the civil authorities of Indiana and Ohio have compelled the submission of the White Caps, and the autnorities of the Mississippi will just as certainly restore order to that commonwealth.

The news from Walthall, Miss., is well calculated to arouse the white people throughout the United States. We are not in possession of all the facts. We only know that a constable's posse, in discharge of officicial duty, was fired upon by a party of negroes in ambush, and several white men were killed.

We have no doubt the hour of retribution will come, and the perpetrators of the outrage meet the penalty of their crimes.

Let it not be supposed that this hideous affair evinces the retrogression of mankind. It is a dark and bloody incident of the race problem that has been thrust upon us, and which we find resolution in the absolute supremacy of the white man.

It is unquestionably the interest of the races in the South to live in peace together. It is the part of patriotism, humanity and Christianity to leave nothing undone to accomplish so desirable a result but, if negroes will not know their place and permit peace and harmony to accomplish their beneficient results, they must bear the consequences that will inevitably follow.

No doubt the triumph of the Republican party in the national election has been a disturbing influence in arousing expectation in the colored people that cannot be realized.

But this will soon pass away and in a little while the sovereignty of law will be restored and order restored.

In the meantime we counsel moderation, and that self-poise that is consistent with manhood, justice and right.

We speak for the white people both in the assertion that no wrong is intended to the negro, and that white supremacy must and will be preserved.—New Berne Journal.

THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY.

So long as there will be a country to love, so long must there be a party to defend it. Other parties are parties of expediency; the democratic party is the party of principle.

There have been platforms innumerable, but all Democratic platforms from the organization of the party to the present time; have insisted on a strict construction of the Constitution, and the limitation of the federal government to powers and prerogatives expressly conferred upon it. In the nature of things the party must continue to be, as it has ever been, the body-guard of the Constitution.

Never was a party in better condition. It has often been in better condition for the accomplishment of the ends of the people, but never has it been more firmly entrenched in the confidence and affection of the people.

Vance, Ransom, Morgan, Butler, Vest, and their democratic colleagues of the Senate; Cowles, Breckinridge, Cox, Carlisle, and their party associates of the House, are standing by their flag and disputing every advance toward centralization, and the overthrow of the of the rights of the States and the liberties of of the citizen.

Governors of States and State Legislatures are asserting the same immortal principles, and, better than all this, the people of all sections have renewed their vows on the alters of their country.

I is questionable whether the Democratic party is more potential for good when it is in charge of the Government, or when it stands as a stone wall against the encroachment of the enemy whose success is a the precuser of public robbery and national dishonor.

Let every democrat organization maintain its discipline, and every member realize that to him is intrusted the defense of the nation and the security of the people.

"DO YOU CATCH ON?"

(This incident, did it) "Did you see the little chick manage to catch on to what I meant when I said, 'Let the bird mind Father?' he might have remarked with equal truth, "I needed that badly." What made this little chick fresh from his shell and without any special instructions from Mr. or Mrs. Chick, attempt to seize and follow that bug? Instinct. Quite right.

Now, my friend, use your instinct and your "bug" a half shave, and you will find that you are the chick in making for

GUANO

To those who have not as yet made arrangements, we would say that we would not make any arrangements on guano until they see us. We have got the best, while some other brands have been ruled out and our State chemist will not let them be sold because they have so lowered their standard. Ours stands at the head of the list; don't buy until you come to our store and examine the analysis on all, we will show to you and sell you better goods than any one else has. We know this an can prove by analysis as well as field tests; we guarantee the price on all brands that is, we will sell the same brand as low as anyone else sells it, to be paid in middling lint cotton November 1st. We believe we can sell you guano that will make enough more than some other brands to pay for goods. Come to see us.
