Fashion Notes.

All advices from the other side continues to enlighten us on the mania for red. The newest cardinal red fancy is linen sets of collars and cuffs, with a broad binding of cardinal red. Bustles—or rather the monstrosity, the pannier—are no longer worn by well-dressed ladies. New over skirts combine thus far all the features of those of early summer— very long, quite full, draped only in the back, and that scantly The corset or armour basque is still given the preference, and a simple piping is used instead of fringe or lace the adornment consisting entirely of bows and ends of ribbons, either gros grain in color, or black velvet. Polonaises are worn by everybody and are ever so stylish. There is a fancy for embroidering thin white muslin, or white coral, green or other colored dots with worsted of the same shade. Red is most used. And there are thin muslin fichus trimmed with a ruffle that is scalloped with red, and the fichu is dotted all over with knots of red, trimmed with bows of cardinal red. We are told that of the light tints that will prevail this season, pink from the palest to the deepest is selected as the favorite, and that blue is quite put aside after its long reign. Scarfs are again worn on hats, with immensely long streamers. Silver filagree ornaments of every discription are very much worn, and are among the prettiest of the seasons ornaments.

Ladies now hang their fans by a two inch-wide cardinal ribbon, at the left side. The ribbon is a pretty contrast to all dresses, whether light or dark.

Cardinal red stockings are worn abroad. Spun silk are quite the rage this summer, and unbleached or solid colors are more in demand than stripes.

Old fashion China crepe shawls are worn as fichus, and either fastened in front with a large old-fashioned brooch or the ends crossed and passed through the belt on each side.

New sets of lingerie are imported, to be worn with suits.

The collar is sailor-shaped, very large and square, made of ecru linen and embroidered all over in white chain stich; each collar has a black anchor, and the sets are bound with black.

There are also lovely sets embroid- with green, to be worn with green cambrics, and lovely sets for morning bound with cardinal.
