THE DAILY JOURNAL.

WILMINGTON, N. C.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 21, 1869.

Salisbury Old North State.

We publish with pleasure the following article from the Old North State. We assure the Editor that our remarks to which he takes exception were intended to be complimentary, and we regret that we failed to express ourselves so as to make our feelings understood. We know not only from the columns of that paper, but from conversations with the Editor immediately after his return from Washington City in 1867, as one of the Commissioners appointed by the late Governor WORTH, that the course of the Old North State has been consistent with itself and governed throughout by principle. While we have differed frequently with that paper, and sometimes widely, we have always done so with regret and with respect for the opinions of the Editor.

We regard the position of the Old North State to-day entirely in accord with its teachings in the past, and probably, with one exception, the only paper in the State occupying the same position which can justly claim the least respect for consistency. This we intended to say in our former article, and take pleasure now in correcting any erroneous impression we may have created:

THE WILMINGTON JOURNAL AND OLD NORTH STATE.—The Wilmington Journal does not seem to accurately remember our position in the past. It was in 1867, and not in the last State election in 1868, as the Journal supposes, that we were dissatisfied with "the organization, the platform and the canvass of the Conservative party." We believed from the first that reconstruction under the laws of Congress could not be avoided, and we wished to make the best we could out of the situation. We desired to unite the entire conservative element for the purpose of electing and obtaining control of the Convention. If this had been done we would have to-day a good constitution. Impartial suffrage, of course, could not have been avoided, but no able bodied man would be allowed to vote who neglected or refused to pay his taxes. In other respects the old constitution would have been retained with little or no change. And this could have been effected by the proper course. A large number of Republicans, including nearly all the talent and respectability of the party, were willing to unite with the conservatives upon such a platform. A split which lasted for some time actually took place in the ranks of that party. There was precisely such a condition of things as was recently taken advantage of by the conservatives of Virginia in the formation of the Walker party. We were then for pursuing the same course under precisely the same circumstances that was pursued by our conservative friends in Virginia. And subsequent events have more than justified our course.

But after the failure to form a coalition with the Conservative Republicans, and it became apparent what sort of a Constitution would be presented to the people of the State, we went as heartily with the Conservatives to defeat it and the Radical ticket in April 1868, as did the Journal. We made as many if not more sacrifices to accomplish that object than the editor of that paper. The platform of the party in that contest met with our entire approbation, though it was not, on one point, expressed exactly in the language we would have employed, could we have had our choice. We were in favor of saying to the colored people in so many words that we were in favor of conferring the right of suffrage upon all of them who possessed certain qualifications. This being objected to by some, we, as a member of the committee on resolutions, had the following plank inserted into the platform, which covered the ground for which we contended.

"Resolved, That we have no prejudices against the negro race, and that we are in favor of conferring upon them all the political rights and privileges that can be done consistently with the

Such was our position in the two canvasses that have occurred in this State since the passage of the reconstruction acts, and we see nothing to regret in the course which we pursued. We were not at all satisfied with the New York nominations in July, 1868, nor with that part of the platform which related to reconstruction—we mean in a practical point of view. We were for accepting the reconstruction policy of Congress, outrageously wrong as we believed it to be, because we regarded it as inevitable. On such a platform—which will be the next Democratic platform—in relation to reconstruction, with Judge Chase as our candidate, success would have been almost certain. Without it we never saw any hope of success, and were not in the least disappointed in the result.

We have always found the Journal fair and courteous, and we believe it will set us right in its columns.

Second Sight.

PARKER PILLSBURY, one of the original, leading and consistent Abolitionists and Radicals, who knew and loved the negro at a distance which but lent enchantment and strength to his affections, has lately visited Charleston. He came not only to visit his brother, Gilbert Pillsbury, the Radical Mayor of that city, but to see the "man and brother" in his home; to see the colored people as they are and not as they are pictured for political purposes. It may well be supposed that the official position of his brother enabled him to see the colored man in the best possible light, while his own sympathies and prejudices would naturally lead him to look upon the negro with many degrees of allowance.

He writes his views from Charleston to the organ of woman's rights, The Revolution, and we make the following very singular and significant extracts from one of his latest letters:

"Push woman's suffrage at the North against all obstacles and oppositions; sparing nothing, sacred or profane, that lies in your way. But meantime we may rest the suffrage question here for a period, at least, until some much more elementary culture and elevation is secured. He surely must have a low estimate of the solemn responsibilities of a government involving the liberty, the person, the property and life of every individual of that government, who would force the ballot on thousands and thousands to be seen all over the South. And forced it was on many men, wherever the slaves have voted; as much as ever their tasks to the cotton field.—They knew no more and cared no more for what they did in voting than if they were as infantile in years as they are in citizenship and in political experience.

"The white people here prate continually of negro ignorance and inferiority. But they should remember that they themselves have had the teaching and the training of them through ten of their generations, and this, of which they now complain, is the melancholy result. Intemperance here is frightfully prevalent, and the colored people share almost universally in the evil.—The whiskey here is diabolical, and yet they appear to love it more than anything else, women as well as men. They drink fired hot from the barrel, clean and pure, and I have seen mothers pour it down the throats of their six months old babes. And what is worse, there are very few white men who employ them to any extent, that do not keep a barrel on tap, and furnish it to them whenever a better bargain, or more work, can be had thereby.

"The marriage tie is not even a bean knot among them. There is no tie about it as a general fact. On the plantations, very few are born. Infanticide is common, it is said, but marriage is rare, unless forced upon the parties, and that is not frequent. In the towns it is somewhat better than in the country, but everywhere apparently, among these poor beings, the legal restraints of marriage are but little regarded.—As to any idea of comfortable housekeeping in the rural districts, and they comprise almost the whole South, it is all a mystery yet to be revealed, even to its first principles. There are generally no stated times for meals. No family seems ever to be provided. The man cook their own heavily of fat when they get ready, and so do the women. It is calm clear to this day, as in slavery times, or with a little more uneasiness and unhappiness, but offenses clear than any other. Among hundreds of these poor beings, I have not seen one knife or fork; or any spoons but tin ones, that seem never were like by scouring. Tables of clean scoured pine are no doubt, none of them, I have seen, very few where I have been, a decent chair, still less table or chair. I saw infants and very young children naked from morning to night; and been, of at least a dozen years, with only a single garment, and that but a scanty apology. Many women young and old, had little on above the waist and nothing below the knees, and were doing day's works that not a white man in New England or New York would perform. At a railroad depot, last week, I was detained an hour for a train. Several colored women were also waiting, some with a child or two, whose head they were diligently exploring; and, as I saw, not without the most loathsome success. One old woman laid her head in the lap of a younger one and then a regular Ku Klux Klan search was instituted through it, with results, to, of which I need now speak.

"The ballot may be the one thing needful there; but, it seems to me, soap, sand, fine tooth combs, pots, kettles, chairs, tables, knives, forks, spoons, decent food, cooking and clothing, glass windows, and even looking glasses, should at least go side by side, if they may not precede the rights of suffrage and of sovereignty."

No Southern editor has said more, and none with so little regard for taste or feeling in speaking of the colored race. In the extracts quoted are contained every objection which the Southern people have urged against negro suffrage and Congressional reconstruction. We were willing to give the negro every right and protection which his condition demanded. Our own interest and common humanity required that we should take care of, and elevate them. Their well-being, their enlightenment and civilization was a political and social necessity and a moral duty. We looked hopefully to the time when they would be capable of exercising the rights of citizenship. Contrary to our deep settled convictions of the best interests of the country, and in violation of natural and political laws, party necessity and sectional prejudice, violently and suddenly thrust these powers upon them.

It is now useless to talk of negro suffrage. The step has been taken, and Mr. PILLSBURY's second sight comes too late. The Southern people will now labor to make the negro worthy of the privileges which have been conferred upon him. We will not and cannot take from him the ballot, but will try to learn him to use it intelligently and for the benefit of white and black alike. We will endeavor to withdraw him from the baneful influence of bad men, and urge him to unite with us in building up the prosperity of the country. We feel confident of ultimate success, and the day is not distant when the intelligent blacks will be a great conservative power in the South.

The State Fair.

WILMINGTON, N. C., Oct. 20 1869.

MESSRS. EDITORS:—I attended the State Fair at Raleigh yesterday.

There was a fine collection of specimens of needle work in "Floral Hall." Many articles of merchandise of rare merit and value are on exhibition. Such articles as "Crochet work," "Patch work" and the like by ladies of the State, reflected great credit upon them.

The good taste of the merchants in sending some of their especially rare and fine articles of household goods in ladies and gentlemen's garments was duly appreciated.

The stock of fine Horses was large and good. The Chester Hogs made a fine show, and a small number of "Devon" and "Durham" Cows and Calves of much merit were shown. Some fine specimens of Sheep and Goats were on exhibition.

There were fine fowls, Ducks and Geese on the Grounds.

The department of Agricultural Implements was well supplied with Reapers, Thrashers and the like. Some very new and useful. Many of them will come here in November to our Fair and Exposition.

The programme of opening exercises was a procession in carriages of officers and members of the Society around the Grounds or Course, preceded by a troop of Marshals on horse-back and followed by the fine blooded and other horses and also mules. After which the President, K. P. Battle, delivered a very good and appropriate address.

Respectfully,

SPECTATOR.

For some time past the authorities at Washington have been apprised of the existence of a gang engaged in the manufacture and sale of counterfeit Internal Revenue tobacco stamps.—A detective was sent here to catch the parties engaged, and to-day the following persons were arrested, charged with having in their possession and selling the counterfeit stamps: Fred. Banrisch, ex-Deputy Collector of Internal Revenue; Capt. Thomas, W. Rosch, ex detective of the Revenue Department; Lieut. John H. Stone, late U. S. Whiskey Inspector and at present special detective of the Post Office Department. The counterfeit stamps to the amount of three thousand dollars were seized in the hands of Banrisch. They were sixty pound tobacco stamps, class thirty-two. The U. S. Commissioner bailed Banrisch and Rosch in the sum of $10,000 each, and Stone, against whom the evidence was not quite so strong, in the sum of $5,000, to appear on the 22d instant.

It is stated that the bogus stamps are sent from the manufactory in New York and are pretty thoroughly circulated in the South.

CHANGE IN BUSINESS.

I HEREBY return my sincere thanks to the many friends of the late firm of Worth & Daniel for their continued confidence and support during the interval in which the conduct of the business has devolved on me, and take great pleasure in announcing the return of B. G. Worth, with the experience of a three years' business in New York, to resume his connection with this house. His standing and reputation as a business man are too well known in this community and throughout the country to require endorsement.

I trust the new firm announced below, with this accession, will still further merit the confidence of the public so liberally bestowed in the past.
