THE CONFEDERATE DEAD.

BY A. C. GORDON.

A poem delivered at the unveiling of the Monument to the memory of the dead soldiers of the Confederacy in Thornrose Cemetery, Staunton, Va., September 25th, 1888.

I

Where are they who clasped it away,
Armed with smiles that changed to tears,
Glittering hosts at our feet and
Marching down the hill to war—
Where are they those manly years?

Garlands wreathed their shouting words;
They swept by—their ranks with cheers
Crowded the highway, marched to slaughter,
Sunshine and the songs of birds
They are asleep many years.

Far beyond their voices' scorn
Far from conquest, from opprobrium
Time has said—"The long day's done,
Rest on sleep—that time cannot grieve
Where are they those many years?"

All our hearts were with them there,
All our love, and all our prayers
What of them? How do they fare,
Who went to do and dare,
And are gone so many years?

What of those who were away
Followed by our hopes and fears?
Brave as our march of days
Conquering—Deserter—Traitor—Slave—
Where are they those many years?

II

Better upon the Spartan shield
Borne home or carried from the field
Pierced by the spear and torn and rent
Than to live—whether will or not—
That is all, and there we rest.

That is all. Time's dull tide
Over them lapped in pitiless pride
Heedless of fortune's lavish
Pours and pours and rolls on its tide
Years upon years, night and day.

Gray Time, the impartial reaper
All the verdure of love May
Strew in vain from his wanton arms
When the years of autumn grain are
Over the reaping—What are they?

What are they, who fainted to win
Scarce a glance of that splendid sun
Flashed a day—they saw it, sight,
But that, until the night is calm,
Faded on vapor and rain?

All is gone for them. They gave
All for naught. Where their way
Where they fell and fell—
What was lost. The night was heavy,
That to all, and left no ray.

III

Is that all? Was their sacrifice
Love and faith made blind with tears?
What the loss in day? Are they right?
What the day that they sought
From the sword sweeping year?

Are they who marched away
Followed by our hopes and fears
Neither fever West? Are they
Rest in day, and in night
In the light of all the years

Outlands still shall repeat the words
Their day—from and our cheers
Children's lisplings, women's worth,
Sunshine and the song of birds
Greet them here through all the years.

With them rose shall stand
All our love and all our prayers,
—"What of to-morrow?" The battle's fate
Hath not settled them. Let they rule
Still with years as day the years.

"Where are they who went away
Sped with smiles that changed to tears?"
See yet beside the lines of gray—
Stonewall still rides down this way
They are Time's strongest in the years!

Written for the Roanoke News.

A SAD LITTLE SEA-SIDE ROMANCE.

When she came to the Hygeia she was only seventeen, and now just think what a sad, sad end to so bright and happy a life!

Beatrice Earle was a pretty, attractive girl with large blue eyes the color of violets. I had read of violet blue eyes, but I never believed there were any until I saw hers. Her every movement was grand in itself, and her hair was of a golden brown color that well set off her regular features and clear complexion.

Her character I will describe by only a few simple words, she was generous, true and unselfish, always looking out for the pleasure and comfort of others.

When she entered the ball room there would be a murmur all through it, and her lively ways and pleasant conversation found their place in the hearts of all who knew her.

She came to the hotel with her aunt and one of her young cousins. At first they knew no one else at the place, and consequently had quite a dull time. At the first German of course she danced with Walter, but when she had to lead out some one she decided that as she knew no one she would lead out the young man that was best looking. She walked all down the line and finally her eyes rested on a young man from H——, Henry Burton, and she blushingly held out her hand to him. Of course he asked her name and they exchanged cards. The time was no longer dull, for not an evening passed without a ride with Henry, and at night they would dance till tired and then stroll up the beach, where out of sight and hearing of anyone, they would sit and talk until late in the night.

It was there on the beach in the moonlight, with waters rippling at their feet, that Henry and Bea spoke their fatal words of love. It was agreed that they would be married the summer after she had graduated. There was no happier soul than Bea's anywhere to be found; everyone noticed the change in her, the new light in her eyes and the merry little laugh that seemed so full of love and joy.

But, alas, "the best of friends must part," and after two months of bliss Beatrice had to return home and to her studies, and Henry to his profession again. Letters passed between them twice every week, and she had planned to return to Old Point the following summer, and they were to continue their beach walks and talks. To her the last few days of school before her departure seemed ages long, but the longed for day came at last.

She came with her aunt and cousin as before, and she was in such good spirits that she could hardly keep still. Two days, and still Henry did not come to see her, and on the third night while in the ball room she saw him with a beautiful girl leaning on his arm and he was watching her so intensely that though they came quite close to Bea he did not even see her.

Walter did not recognize Henry and thought Bea must be ill for she was so pale and had such an agonized expression on her face. As soon as he spoke to her she seemed to awake and said she felt badly and had better retire.

The next morning she and Walter with a crowd of young people were sitting in the reading room and one of them, a gentleman, was reading aloud the last paper from H——. When he came to the marriage list he laughed and told Bea that hers would be the next of importance to them in that paper. Then he read out all the marriages, and the last on the list was, "Mr. Henry Burton and Miss Jessie Thomson, one of the wealthiest and most attractive young ladies of the place." When he finished all eyes were raised and placed on Bea. For a minute she sat as one stunned, and then throwing up her hands she cried "Oh, God, have mercy on him for he knows not what pain he has inflicted," she rose and attempted to leave the room but before anyone could reach her she fainted and in falling struck her head against the marble mantel. Her friends did all they could for her and she lived until the next night about one o'clock when suddenly waking and laying her hand on her aunt's arm she said, "I am dying now, I can feel my heart stop beating, and before the sun shall rise I will be dead. Tell Henry I died with his name on my lips praying God to forgive him."

Thus ended the life of one of the purest women ever made by the hand of God, and thus ended the "sad little sea-side romance."

NURTURED BY WOLVES.

REMARKABLE STORY FOUND IN AN OLD ENGLISH PAMPHLET.

[From London Satur.]

The Zoologist for March reprints an extraordinary pamphlet entitled "An Account of Wolves Nurturing Children in their Dens." This pamphlet was printed in Plymouth in 1852 and has long been out of print. On a wrapper of a copy in the Zoological Library of the natural History Museum at South Kensington there is the following memorandum in the handwriting of the late Col. Hamilton Smith: "This account, I am informed by friends, is written by Colonel Sleeman, of the Indian army, the well-known officer who had charge of the Thugg inquiries and who resided long in the forests of India." The writer records a number of cases of children who are said to have been nurtured by wolves in India. In one instance a large female wolf was seen to leave her den, followed by three whelps and a little boy. This happened near Chandour, ten miles from Saltanpour, in the year 1847. The boy went on all fours and ran as fast as the whelps could. He was caught with difficulty and had to be tied, as he was very restive and struggled hard to rush into holes and dens. When a grown-up person came near him he became alarmed and tried to steal away, but when a child came near him he rushed at it with a fierce snarl, like that of a dog, and tried to bite it. When cooked meat was placed near him he rejected it with disgust, but when raw meat was offered he seized it with avidity, put it on the ground under his hands like a dog and ate it with evident pleasure. He would not let any one come near while he was eating, but he made no objection to a dog coming and sharing his food with him.

The trooper who captured the boy left him in charge of the Rajah of Hasanpoor, who sent him to Captain Nicholetts, commanding the first Regiment of the Oude Local Infantry at Saltanpour, and some interesting notes as to the boy's habits are given on this officer's authority. He died in August, 1850, and after his death it was remembered that he had never been known to laugh or smile. He used signs when he wanted anything, and very few of them, except when hungry. When his food was placed at some distance from him he would run to it on all fours like any four-footed animal, but at other times he would walk uprightly. He shunned human beings and seemed to care for nothing but eating. If the pamphlet can be proved to be perfectly trustworthy it certainly deserves to be carefully studied by anthropologists.

SOMEWHAT EMBARRASSED.—Jinks was a young man who had been married a year, and he was telling a friend how different he was when single.

"Were you much embarrassed when you 'popped the question?'" asked his friend.

Embarrassed! Well, I should say I was. I owed $1,500 for board and clothes and one thing or other, and didn't have a darned cent to pay it with.

A WILD GIRL.

TWO BADLY FRIGHTENED CITIZENS GIVE A DESCRIPTION OF HER.

[Trinity (La.) Herald.]

One day last week two strangers passed through Trinity on foot, having traveled from Alexandria. They gave a thrilling account of a meeting held with the wild girl of Cinahouls, near Kemp's creek. They say she is one of the most ferocious looking beings that the human eye was ever cast upon. They stopped to ask her a few questions, but could not get nearer to her than fifty feet. She is as fleet as a deer, and at one leap she cleared a tree seven feet high. She uses no language, only gibberish.

Her arms are long, brawny and muscular. She appears to be about 16 years of age and has a kind of limp when walking. They could not get near enough to distinguish whether she had a deformed foot. She had an old knife, which they say was about eight inches long, which she no doubt uses dexterously. She is in height about 4 feet 6 inches, and would weigh about 125 or 140 pounds, with no surplus flesh. These gentlemen say that in their neighborhood they gave the information, and that no one seems to know anything about the girl.

The men say they would not sleep in the woods near where they saw the girl for all that was in the parish. They think she can conquer any three men in the neighborhood. She has immense eyes, and her hair hangs to her waist and is of a beautiful brown. A great many who have heretofore doubted the existence of this girl are now convinced that it is a truth, the information coming, as it did, from two men who had never been in the parish before.

A committee of fifty con men with provisions for two weeks, will be organized, and steps will be taken soon to capture her.

COING ON AN EXCURSION.

They had been prepared for the excursion for about two weeks. The day at last dawned, the young wife determined to be on hand. The clock struck eight, and still she was in the kitchen, her hair down her back, packing edibles in her basket.

"Hurry up," said John, her young husband.

"I'll be ready presently," and away she started to blacken her shoes and put on a clean collar. Then she stuck her head out the back window to ask her next door neighbor to lend her a breastpin.

"Hurry up, John," said she. "You bring the basket, now I'm all ready and am going down to the boat; and say, John, don't forget a box of sardines you'll find in the closet, and bring the pickles and tongue, and be sure and bring the big knife. Do you hear me, John?"

John rolled into the kitchen and began his work. He was interrupted by his wife's voice from below, yelling:

"John, there's a can of strawberries in the ice box, don't forget them. Now hurry, we'll be fearful late, and say, bring one or two more handkerchiefs and and a sun umbrella—or I don't know, it looks like rain, bring my waterproof. Oh, you old poke, you're going to stay there all day. Now run back and close those back shutters and put the cat in the kitchen, and leave a pan of milk for her; and say, just step around to the butcher's and tell him we won't need any meat to day, and leave the key of the cellar under the parlor door mat. Now hurry John. I am off. And don't forget anything or I'll go wild."

He didn't forget anything, but when he reached the wharf he found the boat had been gone two hours.

PINING FOR SYMPATHY.—Dying Benedict—I bequeath every dollar to my wife. Have you got that down?

Lawyer—Yes.

Dying Benedict—On condition that she marries within a year.

Lawyer—But why insert that?

Dying Benedict—Because I want somebody to be sorry I died.

AT SARATOGA.—"Maw, how I perspire!"

"Dear me, Clara, don't let me hear you use that vulgar expression again."

"Do you want me to say 'sweat?'"

"No, you wretched vulgarian, you must say 'you are "bedewed with heat." The first thing you know people will say we haven't got no style about us."

"I don't like Spilbig," observed Mr. Snags. "He's too temperizing."

"That's so," observed Mrs. Snags. "I've often seen his temper rising."

No life can be utterly miserable that is brightened by the laughter and love of one little child.

SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR

TORPID LIVER

Is known by these marked peculiarities:

1. A feeling of weariness and pain in the limbs.
2. Bad breath, foul taste in the mouth, and furred tongue.
3. Constipation, with occasional attacks of diarrhœa.
4. Headache, in the front of the head, nausea, dizziness, and yellowness of skin.
5. Heartburn, loss of appetite.
6. Distention of the stomach and bowels by wind.
7. Depression of spirits, and great melancholy, with lassitude and a disposition to put everything off for to-morrow.

A natural flow of Bile from the Liver is essential to good health. When this is obstructed it results in which, if neglected, soon leads to serious diseases. Simmons Liver Regulator exerts a most delicious influence over every kind of biliousness. It restores the Liver to proper working order, regulates the secretion of bile and puts the digestive organs in such condition that they can do their best work. After taking this medicine no one will say, "I am bilious."

"I have been subject to severe spells of Congestion of the Liver, and have been in the habit of taking from 15 to 20 grains of calomel when great pain had supervened. Since I began to use Simmons Liver Regulator, which gives me relief without any interruption to business."—J. Hess, Mississippi, Ohio.
