The Dreams of Youth.

I built me a vessel long ago,
And fitted it out like the galleys of old;
The sails were as white as the fresh fallen snow,
And its bows were resplendent with crimson and gold,
The bulwarks were firm and its masts strong and tall,
And a gay-colored pennon on high was spread;
The beauty of Youth lent a charm to it all,
And an image of Hope was its proud figurehead.

I launched it one morning in the spring of the year,
When the breezes were low and the sunbeams were bright,
And I, in the pride of my youth, had no fear
Of the strength of the waves or the gloom of the night.
So I dreamed of the riches my galley would bring,
From the lands where no bark had been ever before,
But the summer passed by and spring wore round to spring,
And my vessel returned not, alas! to the shore!

At length, one dark autumn, it came back to me,
But its masts were all broken, its bows were all bare,
The bulwarks were covered with growth of the sea,
And the figure of Hope no longer was there.
While it brought me for freight but the drift of the wave,
The sea foam and weeds that had laid in it long,
And I mournfully sighed as I gazed on the grave
Of the dreams that were bright when Life's heart-beat was strong.

WHY THEY ARE THERE.

An Explanation that Throws a Flood of Light on a Hitherto Mysterious Fact.

It has often puzzled men who had work to do, and when doing it, why so many seeming idlers were to be found in front of a building in process of erection. It has generally been supposed that the building would progress just as fast if these men were absent, but the public has been seriously mistaken. Suppose, for instance, that 50 men are standing or sitting around a new building, under no orders, drawing no pay, but yet watching every movement of the laborers. It has been ascertained that six of this crowd are there to see that no three-cornered bricks are palmed off on the innocent builders by the villainous brick-maker. They may be smoking dirty old pipes, and have the looks of vagrants, but they are there for an object.

The next six men are the committee on the basement. It is their duty to see that the walls are built according to specifications, and that no stone with an air-hole hid away in the center is placed in the walls. They may be discussing politics, or religion, or the weather, but they have their eyes on the masons.

The following ten are inspectors of lumber. It is their business to see that the joists hold out full length, and that no knot-holes have been plugged up and painted over. This committee saves the owner several hundred dollars without once taking their hands out of their pockets.

The next ten are shere to ascertain whether the buildings shall have a tin, slate or gravel roof. You wouldn't think it could make any difference to them, but it does.

Ten more of the inspectors are the committee on mortar. It is their duty to know whether lime or baking-powder is being used with the sand, and whether the sand was brought from Windsor or Constantinople. But for their vigilance many walls would be laid up with flour and water.

The remainder of the fifty are obliged to be around to discuss the tension of iron rods, the resisting power of plate glass, the pressure which an iron column can stand, and several other matters which the general public never stop to think of. This committee is always on-hand in the morning for a full day's work, and its scientific researches and discoveries have been worth millions of dollars to the general public.

Wall Street Daily News.

A Broken Romance.

It is a very touching romance. We heard a Southern editor telling it on an elevated train yesterday, and he was in a great hurry to get home and put it in his paper aed make an affidavit that it was true. The scene of the romance opens in a palatial mansion in New York. A lady sits in a parlor filled with the most costly luxuries. Diamonds as big as filberts glitter in her ears. Lace costing $35 per yard almost hides the color of her dress from sight. A clook costing $18,000 strikes the hour of 4 P M. At this moment her husband rushes into the house pale, haggard, suspenders broken, hat bugned up and his boots all mud.

"Have you—have you caught the epizootic?" she gasps as she starts up.

"Oh! wife, we are busted—ruined—gone up—smashed flat as a shingle!" he meaned in reply.

"How?"

"I invested $75,000 in the Crooked River Railroad at 98 and it has declined to 4! Jay Gould has bought and consolidated it! We must leave this palace and all these luxuries and works of art and take two fourth-story rooms over in Brooklyn!"

She laughed merrily and long. Had the sudden news crazed her? He thought it had; but he was green. She left the room for a moment, and then returned with a pillow case containing $200,000 in greenbacks.

"Let the Crooked River railroad crook away!" she laughed, as she emptied the money at his feet. "You have given me this money during the past five years, a few thousand dollars at a time, to buy little articles of toilet. I had saved it up to get me a pair of stockings for Sunday, but I cheerfully hand it over to my good husband to set him on his pins again. Take it, my darling, and if you can get a whack at Jay Gould bite him hard and I'll back you with the $50,000 I had laid away to send to the heathen on Christmas."

They embraced. All was joy and peace.

Where is that crowd going? To ROSENTHAL'S, to buy boots and shoes. †
