THE FRENCH REPUBLIC

We copy the following special dispatch to the New York World of Thursday, containing information of interest regarding the course of events now going on be-

OFFICIAL.—September 8. The Republic has been proclaimed in Paris. [illegible] which left [illegible] Queen [illegible] mail coach [illegible] Nationale Française. In Paris yesterday evening the approaches to the Palais Bourbon were guarded by detachments of the line and squadrons of the Gendarmerie. The Guards of Paris and the National Guard occupied the centre of the Place de la Concorde, and were formed in square around the centre of the Place de la Concorde. No vehicles were allowed to traverse the Place de la Concorde. The Champs Elysees were cleared of all carriages, and a cordon of National Guards stretched across them at the Rond Point. After [illegible] sitting a number of persons gradually assembled on the grand staircase of the Legislative Palace, and finally came out on the balcony in front, waving their hats and shouting "Down with the Empire! Vive la Republic!" These shouts were not echoed by the troops, but the demonstration was taken up by crowds on the quays and by other crowds in the Rue Royale and along the Rue de Rivoli by the gardens of the Tuileries. These crowds were a compact mass from just beyond the Obelisk of Luxor quite down the Rue Royale to the Rue St. Honore, and down the Rue de Rivoli to the Rue Castiglione. The shops were not shut, and there was no disorder beyond that merely incident to the presence of so great a multitude. About precisely the National Guard and the troops of the line nearest the Legislative Palace began to show signs of sympathy with the people. Sabres were raised on the bayonets, and cries uttered here and there of "Death to the Prussians!" "Long live France!" Shortly after a column, perhaps a thousand strong, of National Guards, fully uniformed and equipped, with a band playing the "Marseillise," came down the line of the quays from the Point des Arts and passed around to the Legislative Palace. The gate-keepers made some resistance, but finally gave way, and the people pressing in after the troops, the whole enclosure was rapidly filled, and the multitude, the troops still in the front, and in perfect order, surrounded the whole building, and passed into the doorways and up the numerous stairways, a number even invading the buildings appropriated to the residence of the Councellors of State and other officials. The cries of the multitude were incessant. The Emperor's name was never mentioned, not even in cries for his downfall. The Deputies of the Left came out of the [illegible] the people [illegible] braced each other with cries of joy, shouting, "Long live France!" The Deputies of the Left were soon gathered in a body, and set off, amid cries of "Al'Hotel de Ville," for the Municipal Palace. Two stalwart workmen in blouses and as many National Guards in uniform seized Madame Picard and Gambetta, raised them in the air, and carried them as in triumph to the Hotel de Ville. The scene on their arrival was most impressive. Some one had mounted the tocsin of Notre Dame, and [illegible] the gray piles flouted three or four tricolor flags. The gilded colossal lamps of the Place de l'Hotel de Ville were wreathed in flags, and high up on each was perched a boy waving a tricolor.

The vast Place itself was a dense mass of people, mingling with whom everywhere were the uniforms and bayonets of the National Guard and of the line. As the deputies advanced or were borne up to the facade of the vast building, Henri Rochefort came out to meet them, holding out both hands with a cry of "Vive La Republique!" At the same moment half a dozen men burst open from within a window in the facade, and began throwing out a great cloud of small white papers, crying as they did so, "These are the votes of the plebiscite!" Shouts for the first time went up a great cry from the whole vast crowd of "Down with the Empire!" It was taken up and sent, with a noise like the roaring of waves, along the quays and along the Rue de Rivoli, both towards the Louvre and towards the ancient City of Paris. Down the great Boulevard de Sebastopol a procession of several thousand troops, surrounded by crowds of men, women, and children, advanced with bands of music. The [illegible] filled the second [illegible] street from front to front of the houses on either side, and the music of the bands was accompanied by the whole mass singing the "Marseillaise." In all this time and in all these places the shops were still kept open; the police were swept up with the processions or quietly disarmed. I heard of and I saw no case of violence, no disorder, no robbery. Everywhere the deepest [illegible] and the most [illegible] order. The [illegible] were torn down from all the public buildings, and in one or two cases the windows of shops were broken, which contained them. In the Rue Vivienne a well-known milliner's establishment was thus treated, but the proprietress came out and remonstrated with the leaders, holding up a gold Napoleon, and saying, "If that passes today, why shall my windows be broken?" The men cheered and laughed, the woman cried "Vive la Republique!" and the crowd passed on. One gate of the Tuileries on the side of the Seine was found open, and the crowd poured in; but forbore to enter the palace on the appearance of M. Emmanuel Arago, who came out to meet them, and said, "Citizens, the Empress left Paris at midnight." The palace, the property of the people, is under the protection of liberty and of the law. The crowd cheered immensely; guards of the National Guard were posted at the gates. The Republic was proclaimed tumultuously throughout all the Hotel de Ville, with the following list of the Provisional Ministry:

Foreign Affairs—M. Jules Favre.
Finance—M. Magne.
Public Instruction—M. Jules Simon.
Justice—M. Crémieux.
War—General Leflo.
Minister without Portfolio—M. Grevy.
Secretary-General—M. Le Vertagon.
Governor of Paris—General Trochu.

[illegible] Picard, Ernest [illegible], and Garnier-Pages have a place in the administration. M. [illegible] has been appointed Prefect of Police, and Emmanuel Arago Mayor of Paris. In response to the Prussian appropriation of that province, Messieurs Valentin and Engelhart have been appointed Civil and Military Commissioners of Alsace.

All the Republicans seem to unanimously [illegible] all connection with the Orleans dynasty, and [illegible] by a single tribe.—N. Y. Sun, Republican.

PETERSBURG VIATHAN WEIGHING

[illegible] About one hundred miles to the south [illegible] Hamilton [illegible] containing an extensive deposit of marine shells and [illegible] variety of extinct species of fishes. But the curiosity which most challenges the interest and investigation of antiquaries is the skeleton of what was evidently once a monstrous fish. It lies on a high plateau in a position giving rise to the theory that its bones were once a great shoal, and that this antediluvian leviathan floundered and perished on the surface as the waters receded. The petrification is perfect, and is estimated to weigh about ten tons. It presents a dual appearance, the head and body that of a humpback whale, and the extremities extended into feelers and antennæ make the polypus or devil-fish, with the exception that they were evidently darting life, filled with a hard and bony substance. The eyes were set in each side of the head, which is flat and oblong, and some twenty-four inches apart. The mouth is armed with triple rows of teeth, which are sharp in front, but underneath and well into the jaw they turn into grinders, capped by a solid osseous formation, running back from the widest portion of the head. In this respect it resembles the celebrated marsh cow of Central America, amphibious in its habit—graminivorous on land, and carnivorous in water. The length of this singular relic of an unknown race has not as yet been determined; but as the body blends into the tail it tapers down to so small a size that, making due allowance, its entire weight would not be far from that stated.

DECHEANCE.—To those of our readers unacquainted with the French language, who may not appreciate the exact force of the word decheance which occurs so frequently in cable dispatches from Paris, it may be well to say that it is intended to signify the failure or extinction of an institution or right by reason of the forfeiture of the condition upon which its existence depends. Apparently the Parisian populace, and those of the deputies voting in accord with them, regard the empire in a state of decheance, having failed, in other words, the imperial dynasty as having become forfeited and [illegible]
