"If I Live to See Next Fall," a musical set in the Depression-era South featuring music and lyrics by Charlotte songwriter Si Kahn, was performed during December in the Johnson Theatre of the Tennessee Performing Arts Center in Nashville.

The play, which won critical raves at Charleston's Spoleto Festival in 1984, is a fictional account of an actual attempt to form a union for tenant farmers in Arkansas in the 1930s.

Shelton Gorelick has been appointed to First Union National Bank of North Carolina board of directors.

Rabbi Jacob Luski, son of Mr. and Mrs. Abe Luski, has been installed as President of the Southeast Region Rabbinical Assembly of the United Synagogue of America.

A $25,000 check was presented to the Charlotte City Council by Abe Luski, in memory of the crew of the Challenger, to be used for a park in their honor. He gave this on the 25th anniversary of his living in Charlotte. He came to the U.S. 26 years ago from Cuba. Other contributors of the $25,000 were his brother, Isaac Luski, and his friends and business associates, Bill and Shelton Gorelick.

The partners of Laventhal & Horwath have received the Prime Minister's Medal of the State of Israel for securing the sale of $10,900,000 in State of Israel securities. They extend their thanks to their many friends and associates throughout the United States. Aaron Gleiberman is the managing partner here in Charlotte.

In appreciation of his tireless efforts to promote the city of Mt. Holly, NC and his continued support of the annual Christmas parade, Julius Goldstein, owner of The Leader Dept. Stores Inc., was named "Grand Marshal" for the city's parade held on Dec. 8.
