OWEN BUSH TELLS HOW TO PLAY THE SHORT FIELD

Famous Shortstop of the Tigers Tells Youngsters What He Has Learned—Translating the Crack of the Bat.

You can never be a success at short unless you can work well with the second baseman, says Owen Bush, shortstop of the Detroit Tigers, in the course of some advice to the youngsters. He goes on in the American Boy to say that the shortstop and the second baseman form the key stone to a team's defense. Upon them depend more important fielding plays than on any other two men. It is up to them to stop the other fellows once they get on base.

"The first bit of advice I would give you would be to play deep. Most shortstops play too near the base line. Several years ago I discovered the advantage of playing ten or twelve feet and then took a step further. Back of the line. For one thing it is far easier to come in on a ball than it is to go out after one, and you can get it a lot better much easier than to your right.

"When you play deep you can come in on grounders and you have a better chance of getting them to short left and short center than if you had to hit the ground and become a fielding. Also when you are playing for luck you have a better chance to get the new drive.

"If you play for luck you will have a chance to see the ball and get your feet up to make a net hit at least to block down the drive. If you are lucky you can get over such balls like one of my friends soon enough to throw out the man going to first base.

Jennings as Shortstop

"Hughie Jennings was manager of our team, is regarded by some men as the greatest shortstop that ever lived. John J. McGraw, manager of the New York Giants, was also one of the greatest infielders the game has produced and Wee Willie Keeler, formerly of the New York Highlanders, was one of the most wonderful natural batters. Baseball fans went crazy at these three men. Keeler, McGraw and Jennings all played together on the old Baltimore Orioles team when they were at their best.

"I have to tell the end ground keeper of the Baltimore park remark time and again that Keeler, McGraw and Jennings were always the first men to show up at the park in the morning for practice and always the last men to leave when morning practice was over. Often it was impossible for the ground keeper to whitewash the lines this until just before the afternoon game because Keeler, McGraw and Jennings refused to leave the field. And I have heard him say that after the season closed McGraw, Jennings and Keeler would visit the park every day and practice for hours and hours.

"In addition to practice you must have disciplined sense. This can be developed. It is quick judgment and the result depends of what to do in certain things. One of the first things you want to learn is how to transmit the crack of the bat. You can tell when a ball is going by the sound made when ball and bat meet. I can't describe these sounds to you but you will learn to recognize them if you pay close attention to them.

Sense of Sound

"If you keep your ears wide open you will soon discover that a foul hit by the second baseman leaves the bat with an entirely different kind of noise than one hit in a straight direction and the same holds good on balls hit to the first baseman, the third baseman, the pitcher and catchers.

"Another thing you want to do is to find out how batters hit different pitched balls. And the way to find out what kind of a ball is to be pitched is to watch the signals of the catcher. A batter will not hit a fast ball over the heart of the plate in the same direction as he hits a low curve that cuts the outside edge of the plate. You will learn to shift your position for a fast ball, slow ball and curves.

"That is where practice will help you. Most boys want to bat all the time. Batting practice is all well and good but fielding is far more difficult to master. The kind of batted balls you want to pay more attention to than any other kind is the slow one. Those slow rolling grounders are hard to handle. If you can play a slow hit ball you can play any kind that they hit out to you. The average boy will not believe this but just wait until you try it. I would twice as soon handle a fast grounder as a slow one and most of the errors I make in a year are on those slow hit balls. Anybody can play a hard hit ball but only a few players can successfully play a slow hit ball.

The Hardest Play

"The hardest play a shortstop has to make is getting a ball behind the pitcher, running across behind the box, scooping up the ball and making the throw to first in time to get the base runner. Most of these balls that get away from the pitcher bound over him or bound away from him. Get started every time a ball is hit back to pitcher. Remember that the distance between the plate and the pitcher's box is not far and that the ball often comes at the pitcher with terrific speed.

"Often it comes so fast that he can not get out of the way and the ball hits him and bounds away. He has broken in the speed of the ball and it gets slowly. That is where your work comes in. Here you have to come in at top speed, get the ball and make a difficult throw. So devote as much of your time as possible to handling these slow hit grounders behind the box.

"One thing you must learn and that is to throw the ball as soon as you get it. Do not hold it the way many players do. Any smart base runner will find out that you do this and take advantage of it. I have seen setters-out fielded hits simply because an infielder held the ball before throwing it. The base runner would slow up as if he had given up all hopes of beating out the grounder and as the infielder slowly cocked his arm to go through the formality of throwing the runner would suddenly sprint for first.

"The infielder could not change his slow motion in time to get the ball to first ahead of the runner. Also, if you throw the ball as soon as you get it it will give your first baseman a chance to protect himself. Many bad throws are made to first in every game. If you throw as soon as you get the ball it will give the first baseman a chance to recover the ball if you throw it badly and he happens to muff it.

Snap Throwing

"Learn to throw from any position. Another fault with many infielders is that they have to straighten themselves out and get into a certain posture before they can make a throw. Here the base runner gets an advantage that will give him extra hits. Every fraction of a second is precious. Well, offers get balls in a low stooping position. Learn to throw the ball from that position. Again your practice will teach you how to do this. It will enable you to get five numbers out you would lost if you had to straighten yourself out before making the throw.

"Always throw low rather than high. If you throw low there is a chance for the first baseman to dig the ball out of the dirt or stop it. A thing he will not have a bottom to do if you throw high. Throwing will demand much of your attention. The side arm and underhand motion is the best you can use. Try this and keep on trying till you have learned it.

"Most boys throw overhand, probably thinking that an overhand throw is quicker. Quicker than an underhand or side arm throw. But consider the time it takes you to get your arm in position to make an overhand throw. Throws are hurled in fractions of a second, in the national pastime. Later on I will learn to throw fast with the side arm or underhand motion.

The Hit and Run

"Now on the hit and run play (from the shortstop's standpoint) will have a play on first base. The signal that if that man tries to steal second you will refuse to second base and take the catcher's throw to get the runner. Since you will not have to cover the bag it will be up to the batter to hit the ball to short while the runner is going to second and you are running for the same bag to tag him out. Since you are out of position the ball that he hits to short which you might fit for will go into the outfield for a hit.

"We usually would be never leaving our position on the hit and run play until the ball reaches the catcher's glove. You can get started quickly and reach second base in time to take the catcher's throw and get the base runner. You will also be in your position to field the ball if the batter decides to hit it to short. Thus you should get at least one man and possibly make a double play.

Backing Up Third

"Always back up the third baseman on thrown balls, fly balls or foul balls. Do not depend on your left fielder to do this. He is too far out. Never let the third baseman cut across in front of you and take a grounder that you are going after. You can always prevent this by yelling 'I have it.' If the third baseman runs in front of you chances are that he will miss the ball or knock it out of your reach and you miss the man entirely. Have an understanding with your third baseman.

"When you watch the catcher for his signals so that you can play the batter always give the signal to the second baseman. You are generally in a better position to see the signal than the second baseman is and you can arrange a series of signals with him which will inform him what you are intending to do.

"Always look around and note the position in which the outfielders are playing. Get them established in your mind and know just how far each outfielder is from you and also know how far in they can come on short flies and fouls. You will know then how far out it is necessary for you to go. It will also prevent collisions and general mixups on fielding."

PRINCETON BEATS YALE IN FINALS

Orange and Black Has Season's Baseball Laurels

Good Batting Is Deciding Factor—Yale Uses Five Pitchers Without Effect.

(By the Associated Press.)

New York, June 13.—With a score of 19 runs to six, Princeton defeated Yale at the American League park today and won the baseball series of 1912. Ten thousand partisans, about equally divided, crowded the stands and bleachers to encourage their respective teams.

Princeton won by good batting. Yale was painfully weak in her pitchers, calling upon five twirlers, none of whom was effective. The Blue opened with two runs in the first inning, but when the second session had been played the Orange and Black got through with its pounding of Hartwell, the score stood 9 to 2. In Lewis of the Tigers, Yale made desperate efforts to retrieve, but her batsmen could not solve Lewis's delivery. Four more runs was the best they could gather in the next seven innings, while Princeton added ten to its already formidable lead.

An Instance of School Teacher Who Could Not Write His Name On Back of Check.

High Point, N. C., June 13.—At a largely attended general meeting of the Woman's club Wednesday afternoon the subject of a club house was touched upon and suggestions made that such a club could perhaps be associated with the library or, at least, with the new building of the Woman's Club which is now spoken of. These were only suggestions, however.

Interesting reports were made by the delegates to the State Federation, Mesdames White, Farriss, Long and Wheeler. It was incidentally mentioned during the meeting that a school teacher upon receiving a check which he presented at the bank could not write his name. Instances such as this suggested a method after the meeting, and it is stated locally by a company engaged in law or a [illegible] signed to make blows at the telephone wires.
