Good government in North Carolina is not far more important to the people of this State than the free coinage of silver would be, and it does accomplish more than folly—a political excuse for democrats to allow the latter question to distract and divide them in order to prevent the disappointed and good old Democrats from the control of the National Government. Our State government is sacred to us. I can hardly allow myself to speak of it in the same breath with the national government and its foreign affairs, and the opinions of others in North Carolina should be allowed to be sacrificed the best interests of our State that they can possibly get. The girls and boys grown up since the war, and who have grown up in North Carolina, there [illegible] North Carolina, there [illegible] and the State and family and [illegible] the Democrats were not [illegible] the State [illegible] the Populists [illegible] the State [illegible] the Populists [illegible] the State [illegible] the Populists
