The Farming Guide

(By A. S. KNOWLES, County Agent)

Fertilizer dealers and bankers should seriously consider attending a two-day Soil Fertility School at N. C. State College on September 14 and 15.

The purpose of this school is to help North Carolina's agriculture through improved soil fertility practices. Representatives of banks and fertilizer and lime industries serving North Carolina recognize the importance of building soil fertility to increase farm income. The conference is organized as a joint effort of these groups to (1) study present production levels, and potentials for the future, and (2) to consider ways for realizing these potentials in the nearest possible future.

Registration will take place at College Union between 8:30 and 9:30 a. m. on September 14 and the conference will end at 11:30 a. m. September 15. Application forms may be secured at the County Agricultural Agent's office in Supply.

Those plants with pretty yellow flowers growing in soybean fields may cost you money if they happen to be crotalaria. Most buying stations will insist on soybeans or corn that are free from crotalaria. Their reason is simple; crotalaria seeds and plant parts are toxic to animals. Soybeans contaminated with crotalaria seeds and plant parts are unfit for any use unless the contamination can be removed.

Processors of soybeans do not want them because the oil meal resulting from the crush would not be desirable as livestock or poultry feed.

Export markets don't want them. They have said they will request soybeans from some area other than ours if they cannot get soybeans here that are free of crotalaria.

The Food and Drug Administration has placed necessary restrictions on the movement of grain containing this contamination.

In most soybean fields where crotalaria is present, there are relatively few volunteer plants. The cost of having these plants removed by hand is relatively expensive, but it may pay in the long run.

A farmer knows that it takes planety of fertilizer to grow tobacco or any other crop, and Herbert G. Scull of Acme knows plenty about growing pasture grass. He fertilizes his grass in the summer months because he knows that grass will not grow much in the winter. With more grass than is needed for his herd of beef cattle his pasture is not damaged by over grazing.
