to a University administrator, who then would inform B-GLAD of the nature of the hearing.

Student Attorney General Tucker Ball said he did not have the authority to open the hearing.

"Ultimately the decision lies with the chair of the Honor Court," he said. A separate hearing will be held between now and Monday to decide whether Allen and Tuck's hearing will be opened.

B-GLAD originally had pressed six charges against Allen and Tuck, but after considering the charges, Attorney General Tucker Ball dropped five of them.

The remaining charge alleges that Tuck and Allen knowingly abused a position of trust or responsibility within the University community, Allen said.

Tuck said if he and Allen were proved guilty, the University would be infringing on their constitutional rights.

"There are constitutional questions here that have to be resolved," he said. "I think that the University is making a colossal error in infringing on our first amendment right of freedom of speech."
