THE TARIFF.

Government cannot exist without revenue. The question of ways and means, how can taxation be so adjusted as to meet the requirements of Government, and at the same time be least oppressive to the people?

Both parties admit that at the present time the revenue is too large, and each of them prides itself on what it has done in the relief of taxation.

The Republican party declares that it is in favor of the total repeal of the internal revenue system, but their honesty may be questioned when it is remembered that in all the years in which they had the entire control of every department of the Government, they did not repeal, and made no effort to repeal the internal revenue laws.

The Democratic party is also in favor of the repeal of these laws. They had no hand in their passage, and always deprecated their existence. The Democratic records show that they have always been the party to reduce taxation, and the party which was compelled to impose the internal revenue taxes with a large surplus in the Treasury, and with a view to adjusting the internal revenue taxes so as to meet the requirements of the Government, because to do so would necessitate a continuation of the oppressive tax upon the necessaries of life that falls so heavily on all our people. With a statesmanship equal to the occasion the Democracy has presented the Mills bill as the best solution of the most perplexing problem of the times.

But, we have said that both parties are in favor of a reduction of the tariff. The Republicans claim that they reduced the tariff very considerably. We admit it. But how was it done? Two hundred and five millions of taxes which had been paid by the rich was abolished, and an equal amount was placed upon the honest poor who fight the battles of the country during war and struggle for daily food during periods of peace. The Republicans abolished taxes on incomes and made it up by taxing sugar, tea and salt one hundred per cent. They swept away the taxes on banks, insurance, express and railroad companies, and repealed the detectives that created the revenue, and placed a tax of from 50 to 200 per cent. on every dress, and coat and blanket that protected the poor man's family from the cold of winter. They repealed the taxes on checks and bank deposits and imposed an equal amount on farming and mechanical implements. They took the tax from legacies and successions, and taxed every coffin and shroud.

Republicans are in favor of a tariff for protection. The Democrats want a tariff for revenue only.

At the very opening of the campaign the Republicans have put themselves at disadvantage by asserting that the Democrats are in favor of free trade. When a party to any controversy mistakes the position of his antagonist it goes to the prejudice of the party making the misstatement. There is nothing to show that the Democrats favor free trade. Everything goes to show that they are opposed to free trade. There can be no free trade where a tariff exists. Clearing the Democrats with being free traders is an absurdity. It is [illegible] charge that [illegible] Democrats are free traders [illegible] the States, respectively or to the people. Where has the Constitution given Congress the right to raise a tariff for protection? For what purpose does the Constitution give to Congress the right to impose taxes? Clearly to raise the revenue necessary to the economical administration of the government. A distinguished jurist once said, any tax whether a tariff tax, a direct or land, or a capitation tax that does more than this is levied in defiance of Constitutional limitations of the taxing power.

Here we might rest the argument, but we go further. A protective tariff is a gross, unwarranted and unwarrantable monstrosity. What right has the government to take the poor man's earnings to build the fortunes of the rich? Why should Congress be hungry at Blaine's door to impose a tax upon the poor man's salt, that the rich manufacturer may build a palatial residence? [illegible] the old world. Today England for [illegible]

THE COLORED DEMOCRATS IN POLITICS.

The Raleigh Democrats [illegible]

[illegible] Democrats [illegible] Raleigh [illegible] Democratic Club [illegible] Democratic Club, under the leadership of their active and energetic President, Jas. W. Moore, met the candidates for Governor, Superintendent of Public Instruction, Attorney-General and Auditor, with carriages and escorted them to Hotel Albert. The Grange Y. M. D. C. was also in attendance in force and in campaign [illegible]

At Hotel Albert the distinguished [illegible] were greeted by a large crowd of enthusiastic Democrats, and later a public reception was held at the Pavilion, Colonel Alfred A. Bryan, Esq., welcomed the visitors in a few well-chosen words of congratulation, and the chairs of Governor, State Superintendent, Attorney-General and Auditor [illegible] a procession formed of other partners of a mile long with the New Berne S. F. E. Band in front, followed by the Young Men's Democratic Club of New Berne and Lafayette and a large number of other Democrats, all bearing torch lights and transparencies with appropriate mottoes.

The procession marched through the principal streets followed by carriages containing the speakers.

The city club had five large and elegant transparencies in the line. The first was a seven foot one carried by three men and bearing the following sentiment:

The North State 20,000, or over.
Solid for Fowle and Grover.

On the reverse side was:

New York and Indiana
Will follow with the red bandanna.

The second was another large one also borne by three men, on which was a lustily crowing rooster with this device:

Hear them howl.
This is our Fowle.

On the other side was a sick rooster and inscribed:

This, without mockery,
Will be the fate of Dockery.

The third was an emblem of the Y. M. D. C., containing a neatly executed painted white Cleveland beaver encircled with a flowing red bandanna, and underneath in bold letters:

"Young Men's Democratic Club of Craven County."

On the reverse side was a neatly designed Cleveland face with crowing rooster on the end and these words:

"Vote for Cleveland and Fowle."

The parading of the club transparencies was the delight of every Democrat, Mr. Ash. They received many compliments.

There were other transparencies that had appropriate mottoes and showed taste.

Arriving at the court house square, where a stand had been erected, a solid wave of upturned faces greeted Daniel G. Fowle. He was introduced in a happy and well conceived speech, very appropriate and well delivered by C. H. Guion, Esq., who was selected by the Young Men's Democratic Club to introduce the speakers on the occasion.

Judge Fowle was greeted with tremendous applause. His heart, said he, would be cold indeed if it did not throb at such a reception. In feeling terms and beautiful language he alluded to Eastern Carolina as the land of his birth and after telling of his love for the whole State went on to national politics. He spoke of Cleveland as the man of destiny and the first Democrat of the land. The Democratic party was the party of the Union. The Union and the constitution are one and inseparable. The Republican party is not the party of the Union because it has violated every principle of the Constitution and in doing this made war upon the Union. He pointed out several instances where this party had made war upon the Constitution, one of which was the imposition of excessive taxes. He told the people how they were humbugged by the cry of protection. He did not propose to make a regular campaign speech but only gave a sample of what he would do in October. He was frequently applauded and made a strong impression.

Mr. S. M. Finger was next introduced. He like the to see the people present, like their hats and nothings but and their hats. We were here to carry the action of the State and National conventions. While giving some good sound reasons for such ratification and urging the necessity of educating the people some one the in the crowd called out to him tell something about the President's vetoes. He dropped his line of argument and give a few minutes to the pension frauds that slip through Congress and are vetoed by the President. He was not much of a color line man but believed intelligence would and should rule the country.

Rev. G. W. Sanderlin being the next speaker said he would take a new text and that text was the Young Men's Democratic Clubs. He told them of the importance of organizing for effective work. His arguments and exhortations were illustrative and enforced by many rich and humorous anecdotes and were interrupted with frequent applause.

Thos. F. Davidson, Esq. was the last of the visiting speakers. He said he must confess that he was a recent convert to Cleveland. He voted and worked for him before he became the Democratic party said he was the proper man. He had watched his administration for a year or so he felt a little proud. Laughter. He took a review of the great honesty, sincerity and ability of ex-President Cleveland and when the tariff message was sent in Congress he became a Cleveland man. This fight of tariff reduction and tariff reform is one that he had been waiting for years. Applause. He had [illegible] that for over [illegible] years the Democratic party [illegible] Mr. Davidson [illegible] speech [illegible] Democrats [illegible] Democrats [illegible] Democrats
