Nighttime lighting from the building would extend to the reserve and make it difficult for biologists to carry out their research, much of which must be done at night, Kent said.

Being involved in so many activities provides daily challenges, especially in her work as an RA, Lai said.

"Every day is different," she said. "

Lai said she had no clue what awaited her after graduation. She plans to return to Taiwan to visit friends and relatives and to look for a job. Lai would like to work in international relations, possibly in cross-cultural training.

Regardless of what she does for a living, Lai said she planned to continue participating in volunteer activities.

"I would definitely not want to give up that part of involvement with the community," Lai said.

Lai's family lives in Cary. She has a younger sister who attends N.C. State.

Pam Hartley, an RA in Carmichael who worked with Lai, said Lai brought "flesh and blood" to the RA position.

"She really takes the job away from the 'Oh my God, there's an RA' sort of thing," Hartley said.

Hartley said Lai was a strong role model for her friends and residents.

"Everything we do, she's always putting at least 200 percent into it," Hartley added.

Three alternative designs are being considered for the project:

- a five-lane roadway,
- a four-lane roadway divided by a 24-foot-wide median and
- a four-lane, median-divided roadway with a variable-width median.

All three designs would include bike lanes, sidewalks, curbs and gutters, according to the town manager's report.

The existing portion of N.C. 86 that might be widened is 1.5 miles long and has a 20-foot shoulder.

The estimated total cost for the project is $3,030,000, the report stated.
