Farmers-Bankers in Meeting Wednesday

erosion, he said, and he went on to point out that each year over the country from one-fourth to three-fourths of an inch of topsoil is lost on millions of acres of land through erosion. And it requires nature from 500 to 1,000 years to build an inch of topsoil.

Soil conservation was pointed out as the way to salvation for agriculture in this section. The annual loss of certain elements in land each year is 10 times greater than the amount returned to the soil by commercial fertilizers. Phosphorus, nitrogen, potash and lime are disappearing rapidly, and now is the time for us to conserve our lands.

"We have in legume crops the ability to take nitrogen out of the air, the various legumes taking about 1-3 of the nitrogen needed for their growth from the ground and the other two-thirds from the air. When these are plower under they return nitrogen to the land. Tobacco, peanuts, corn and cotton cannot take nitrogen from the air, and with this situation to be remedied, the soil conservation program offers an unusual opportunity for its accomplishment."

No nation that ignored agriculture has survived, the speaker said in declaring that we must act now if we are to save this country by building on fundamental principles. He stressed numerous ways in which bankers can aid the movement and urged them to action.

The agricultural committee of the bankers' association is now promoting a system of grading for farmers. Forms are available at banks, and farmers will find it interesting and worth while to get one and grade themselves. There is no fee attached to the form, and the farmer can gain an accurate idea of just how he stands in running his farm, Paul Brown, of Raleigh, who explained the questions, stating that the man who earned a high grade either always had money or could always get necessary credit.

THIS whiskey is 12 months old. And man, what a world of flavor and smoothness those twelve months bring to this good Kentucky Bourbon.
