Butner Clinic Wilder Attends On Pastoral Care

How the church can better become the touchstone of stability for our age which has been called a neurotic society is a question which concerns Rev. James M. Wilder, pastor of Kings Mountain Baptist Church in Kings Mountain.

This concern led Rev. Wilder to enroll in a six weeks course in clinical pastoral care at John Umstead Hospital, Butner, N. C., which ended the past week. The course was designed to provide ministers with an opportunity to come to grips firsthand with many of the problems which beset the mentally ill. In the therapeutic hospital setting the ministers were able to gain clinical experience in ministering to troubled individuals while serving in the capacity of chaplain.

"The course also included valuable training at the Alcoholic Center and Murdoch Center which serves mentally retarded persons," Wilder said.

Through seminars, lectures, conferences and individual guidance provided by the hospital staff members, the ministers learned to recognize the symptoms of emotional distress and how to relate constructively to those who come to them for help.

In reviewing the course, Chaplain W. F. Askins, supervisor of the course, said "Attention was focused not only on problems involved in mental illness, retardation and alcoholism, but on understanding the person as a whole."

Rev. Wilder, one of six pastors who participated in the course, is also a member of the faculty in the Bible Department of Gardner-Webb College.

He holds a B. A. degree from Wake Forest College, a Th. M. degree from Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, and has done graduate work at Appalachian State University, Emory University, and Princeton Theological Seminary, as well as completing a graduate course in insurance and family finance offered by New York Life Insurance Company.

Rev. Wilder's other pastorates have been in Indiana, Florida, and South Carolina, as well as in North Carolina. For six years, while living in Shelby, he was Special Agent for New York Life Insurance Company.
