There's a caveat, however. It seems — believe it or not — that straight porn is farther of gay reality porn. We plan to stay there and continue to grow and evolve the genre further.”

While there is no shortage of participants in reality porn, a quick Google search accurately gauges the immense popularity of the genre among viewers: Alexa, a Web information company that consistently ranks the most visited websites in the U.S., lists Pornhub.com and YouPorn.com — sites that allow regular people to upload and view homemade and amateur porn — as numbers 28 and 40, respectively.

To put these statistics into perspective, both sites receive more traffic than those of corporate giants Fox News and Disney. Blumenthal says he understands why these particular sites and reality porn in general have increased in popularity since its inception.

“That’s the beauty of reality porn: There are no real stars,” he says. “The stars are the guys next door who are filming their own hookups and buddies.”

Former “guy next door” and reality porn star Johnny Maverick, 31 — whose credits include MaleSpectrumPass’s “His First Huge Cock” — agrees: “I think it represents the future.”

And perhaps he’s right. Like the sitcoms of yore that continue to die a slow death, only to be replaced by reality television, so too are over-the-top porn productions now relegated to an X-rated graveyard.

“I think the genre has only just begun,” predicts Blumenthal. “I think we are going to see more exhibitionist sites, more sites with live video like Manhunt’s Mancam, and more everyday guys jumping in front of the camera.”

ahead in reality porn than its gay counterpart.

“Fewer gay content studios embraced the reality porn genre in the early days,” explains Paul L., “so it’s more novel to gay fans than to straight. I like to think that as young as MaleSpectrumPass may be, we’re at the forefront
