"Some men are like wheel-barrows—they have to be pushed all the time." We came upon this prodding statement in our reading recently, and it has been running through our mind ever since.

Now a wheel-barrow is designed to be a wheel-barrow. A man is not designed to be a wheel-barrow. When a man is like a wheel-barrow, we have an individual who is contrary to the design and make-up of a man.

It is the glorious heritage of a man to be the pusher—to push things, plans, and ideas. It is his glorious endowment from on high to possess initiative and aggressiveness. We sell our heritage and prostitute our endowment when we make of ourselves wheel-barrows that need to be pushed.

When a wheel-barrow is not pushed, it stands still. It will catch the rain, which soon becomes stagnant. It will rust. This can never be the goal of man. The task of pushing things, and plans, and ideas in our present crisis is herculean. Not one of us has the moral right to add ourselves to the things that need to be pushed.

The call of the hour is to stretch hand and heart and mind to the utmost in the performance of our assigned duties. Anything short of this is playing a wheel-barrow game. Don't be a wheel-barrow.

Cloudbuster Celebrates First Anniversary

One year ago the CLOUDBUSTER ran the following editorial:

"Here it is—the first issue of the CLOUDBUSTER, official chronicler of Navy life at Chapel Hill.

"In these pages every Saturday you will find the week-by-week story of this station. The CLOUDBUSTER aims to cover the Pre-Flight front here, bringing you news of all the activities, as well as on Naval aviation in general.

"But it is hoped that the CLOUDBUSTER will do more than that. A good newspaper has an indefinable, but very real flavor, and it is our hope that these pages will capture and reflect the spirit and essence of Pre-Flight life, as well as record the cold chronology of events.

"Its success in approaching this goal will depend in large measure upon you, as contributors to these columns and as friendly critics also. First and last, it is intended to be your newspaper, and as such can be no better than you—as a cadet, enlisted man, or officer—help to make it.

"Regular reporters, cartoonists, and feature writers are particularly needed to help us cover the news, and print it as it happens. Interested parties are referred to the editorial office of the CLOUDBUSTER in Room 105, Alexander Hall.

"We are indebted to many for assistance given in preparation of this issue, and herewith express our gratitude for the fine cooperation received."

The above holds true as the paper celebrates its first anniversary. Only now the CLOUDBUSTER office is located in Navy Hall.

We still need reporters, cartoonists and feature writers, and anyone interested is urged to drop by the CLOUDBUSTER office.

Those who have worked on the paper for the past year are indebted for the assistance given by cadets, officers and enlisted personnel, and once again we herewith express our gratitude for the fine cooperation received.
