PNEUMONIA
Pneumonia has been called "the captain of the men of death" and rightly so. It carries off 100,000 victims in the United States every year.

We have learned how to prevent typhoid and yellow fever, diphtheria, smallpox and many other diseases that were formerly so widespread and fatal, but we have not found a specific remedy for preventing or curing pneumonia.

It is most prevalent in January, February and March. This proves that there is some relationship between cold, inclement weather and pneumonia. There is more than one type of this disease, any one of which is apt to develop from a common cold, that extends to small areas here and there in the lungs. This type accounts for many deaths among old people and children, especially the undernourished.

Accidents and anesthesia are sometimes followed by pneumonia, which is probably due to the inhalation of noxious microbes into the lungs.

The most dangerous form of this disease is due to a specific micro-organism known as the pneumococcus. This type runs a definite course. The poisons generated from the germ may cause death, or the heart may be overcome and so disabled that it cannot keep up the fight for life and the patient succumbs. He may die from exhaustion.

The treatment is to keep every organ in the body in as good a condition as possible. If this is done, and the heart can be sustained, the patient, especially if fairly strong, will overcome the disease which usually runs its course in from seven to nine days.

The alcoholic or habitual drinker is a poor disk. He does not withstand pneumonia well. The vigorous often survive, if complications do not arise. Even then they may recover, sometimes after a lengthy convalescence.

Long exposure to wet and low temperatures, remaining in damp clothing, all tend to invite cold which may result in an attack of pneumonia, especially among the old.

Louisa's Letter

Dear Girls,

If there is one mortal who gets on a person's nerves more than a grouch it is the person who is too nice.

One such person I have in mind is a woman who absolutely refuses to let one be comfortable. She insists on your changing seats because one chair is softer than another. Then you must get up and change its position because the light is in your eyes.

Perhaps you are sitting in a draft or you are in a spot where there isn't any breeze. At any rate it is up to you to keep on the move if your hostess is to be satisfied.

Probably you decide as the day is hot that there is nothing you would enjoy more than keeping quiet and reading a book, but are you allowed to do this?

I should say not. Our hostess has planned out the day to the minute and she works herself down to give you a good time. You must play cards, play golf, drive, do anything but stay home and get a few minutes rest.

She has trained her children to be so "nice" that they almost drive you mad. You gather from their actions and conversation that their one object in life is to entertain you. In dulcet tones they ramble on and talk for hours about insane things. They inquire as to your health and how you rested during the night, etc., etc.

If you suggest that you need a rest the entire family becomes alarmed and if you manage to forestall the doctor's visit, it is up to you to, at least, take an aspirin or an yeast cake.

If you take a walk in the garden you must examine every shrub and exclaim over every bloom. Someone accompanies you with the express purpose of entertaining you.

As I have said before, there is such a thing as being too nice. The average guest appreciates being allowed to use his own brain and to amuse himself every once in a while.

The International Sunday School Lesson for Feb. 25, "The Twelve Sent Forth."

By M. F. Hodges

Time: 28 and 29 A. D.
Place: Galilee.

Characters: Jesus; the disciples and the people.
Scripture lesson: Matthew 9:35-11:1.

Reading the continued story of last Sunday's lesson (Matt. 9:14-32) we find Jesus is still pressed by the crowds and kept busy by those seeking relief, that it is difficult to find any place for him to secure any rest from his labors. John's disciples come asking questions. They want his disciples to fast and be solemn. Jesus tells them his disciples are too busy in service for this. Too, he informs them that they will have plenty time after he is gone for that. A distressed father comes to him because of the serious illness of his daughter. Jesus turns aside to heal her. On the way Jesus heals a woman of a disease of long duration. Two blind men follow, begging him to open their eyes.

Jesus went about all the cities teaching, preaching and healing. Jesus taught about God and His kingdom. This healing was not his main purpose. However this seems to be uppermost in the thoughts of the crowds. Out of the pity of his heart he healed their sicknesses and diseases.

Jesus found the people fainting and as sheep without a shepherd. The religious leaders were concerned about ceremonies and outward religion. Jesus was concerned for folks themselves. He asked that they pray with him that the Father will send forth workers into the harvest. Here Jesus calls unto him his twelve disciples and gives them power (authority) to preach and to heal. While Jesus is itinerating in Galilee he is moved with pity and compassion as he sees the spiritual destitution of the people, and here begins to prepare the twelve for their work. If Jesus could not find the fit, he took what he found and made it fit. These twelve men were far below the great task to which they were called but Jesus takes them, and with their willingness, makes them equal to the task. This is the way Jesus does with your weak life and mine.

What the world needs today is

CAP-SLEEVED GOWN

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

More and more, simplicity of design is giving way to elaborated detail in the fashioning of millady's nightgowns. Especially is the vogue of the sleeveless nightgown passing. The newer models in some instances have wrist-length sleeves which appear almost quaint and amusing in contrast to the sans-sleeve types advocated these many seasons past. A compromise between sleeveless and long-sleeved is the gown which has a tiny cap sleeve effect as here pictured, for it is fashion's decree that shoulders must be covered. The pretty model illustrated is fashioned of chardonize, a soft lovely weave which is particularly adapted to lingerie needs, since it launders beautifully, always retaining its exquisite silken sheen. The stylizing of this gown with a fichu-like effect which develops into cap sleeves is particularly interesting.

men and women of a great purpose, a great devotion, men and women willing to pay the price of a great ideal. Selfishness and greed has occupied high places in our social and business life too long. We need to learn a new lesson, and our leaders need to have higher and nobler purpose; a zeal for righteousness, then conditions will be better for all of us. Jesus chose the twelve disciples from the common run of folk. All the twelve were from Galilee except Judas who turned out badly, he was from orthodox Judea. Out of these common folk Jesus made these men the builders of his church. Are we waiting today for great men to come forth and build the church in our communities? It seems so. Give Jesus a chance with your life as one of these common folk and see what he can do with you.

Jesus was face to face with the task of establishing his kingdom on earth. The task to be done, the hour of opportunity, were shared by Jesus with this little company of men, great and noble men in the making, men whose names will last as long as times shall last and eternity endure. The early itinerating preacher came into close contact with the masses, so did Jesus. Since then many of our fashionable churches have gone away from the masses and reach only the classes. Doubtless many men out yonder among the masses are hungry for some human touch and word of sympathy and failing to get this resort to some other method which is destructive. Now, as in the day when Jesus talked with the multitudes in Galilee, this sense of compassion and compulsion to serve is the first and essential requisite for membership in this company of whom he is chief. If all the half billion professed Christians on earth today had the spirit of the Christ, what a different world this would be. Needless to say wars would cease, justice would prevail, righteousness would be proclaimed everywhere.

Thinking of the millions in this and other lands without Christ, does it give you any concern? If not you fail to have the mind of Christ. Do you long for the salvation of others and pray for it? All Christian men and women, and boys and girls ought to feel that they have a work to do in bringing others to Christ. In these great harvest fields the laborers are so few. Will you not set yourself to the task of gathering these souls for Christ? Many in these great harvest fields the labor-
