"HILLS OF ENCHANTMENT"

The following lines written as a tribute to the little Town of Highlands, in the Blue Ridge Mountains of North Carolina, by Robert L. Conlon, who passed away several weeks ago in Hollywood, Florida.

Hills of enchantment - how great are thy charms,
With rustic village tucked beneath thine arms,
Caressingly sheltered from maddening pace,
That besets so many of Adam's race;

Breaks the quietude like a mother's croon,
As sunset chimes with a sacred haunting tune
Lulls the mountain folk into peaceful sleep,
As in each hamlet the dark'ning shadows creep.

Looking down - 'atop those enchanting hills,
With silver lakes of morning mist, that fills
And spills into each cove and vale below,
Only to break in countless puffs that glow
And glisten like cottony balls of down,
Refracting the tints of a day new born;
Then floating gently off from out our view,
Bearing aloft our dreams to the azure blue.

What myst'ries lie in those enchanting hills,
Stretched like the sea, with never ending thrills
Of wave on wave of purples, greens, and blues,
A white copped cottage with its gentler hues,
A mansion boldly perched 'atop a cliff
Just like some old world castle here adrift;
